THREE CENTS

Death Plots, Nazi Threats Mar Vienna's Hope of Calm

Schools, Theaters Open; Socialists Driven Into Sewers.

Revolt Order Reign of Terror

Casualty Totals Range From an Official 239 to 1,800.

(Copyright, 1934, by The United Press.) Vienna, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—The hangman went into action tonight as court-martials swiftly returned verdicts of guilty and dealt out death sentences to ringleaders in the Socialist rebellion against the Fascist dictatorship of Chancellor Dollfuss.

Six men were sentenced to hang in Vienna and two were executed at Saint Pölten. The number may run into scores.

(Copyright, 1934, by The Associated Press.) Vienna, Feb. 16 (A.P.).—The day from bloodshed today to a tenuous peace marked by fighting in Vienna's sewers, rumors of plots, and rebel Socialists' schemes for reprisals.

Theaters and schools were ordered reopened after four days of carnage, and the normal course of life was returning, but scattered bands of fleeing Socialist Republican Guardsmen hid in the large sewers and emerged early today for swift guerrilla raids.

Rumors of an impending Nazi push to seize the governmental reins from Chancellor Dollfuss' administration circulated along with others that the assassination of three government leaders was attempted.

Chancellor Dollfuss, Vice Chancellor Fey, and Prince von Starhemberg, leader of the Fascist Heimwehr, and other officials were said in these unconfirmed reports to be marked for violent deaths, but the principals admitted nothing.

Order New Terrorism. Socialist headquarters issued orders for another reign of terror against the Heimwehr, and sabotage. Unverified reports from Salzburg, meanwhile, said a railway there had been dynamited and that a high tension electric line was blasted.

Vienna police conducted a search for Socialist weapons and probed underground passages for lurking detachments of gunmen. Shortly before midnight the search had yielded 50 machine guns, 1,800 rifles, 1,100 hand grenades, 800,000 rounds of ammunition and 300 pounds of dynamite.

The first death tolls in the civil war made public by the official Austrian News Agency set the total deaths among government forces at

Peek Offered Export Bank

Post Forecast Selection; 'Horse-Trader Needed,' Declares Jones.

George N. Peek has been definitely offered the post of president of the new Export-Import Bank, Chairman Jesse Jones, of the RFC, said last night.

"What we need is a horse-trader rather than a banker for this job," Jones explained, adding his hope and confidence that Peek would accept.

The Post predicted the selection of Peek on Wednesday. Since he completed his far-reaching plan for an export corporation and submitted it to President Roosevelt, Peek has not been very busy. Apparently his plan is held to be a little too drastic and the Export-Import Bank is the compromise solution.

For the time being the new bank will confine its activities to promoting Soviet trade; later it is believed it will extend its influence to all American foreign trade. When it does, it will find itself in a position to accomplish all or most of what Peek envisaged in his plan, officials believe.

Legal hitchers are delaying the launching of the bank, it was said at the White House yesterday. These will soon be cleared up, it was indicated.

Widow Ends Testimony In Nixon-Nirdlinger Case

Philadelphia, Feb. 16 (A.P.).—Taking of testimony in the legal fight of Mrs. Charlotte Nash Nixon for a larger share in the estate of her slain husband, Frederick G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, ended in Orphans' Court today.

Judge Charles Sinker adjourned indefinitely the hearing of the young widow's claim, and ordered the various claimants to the estate to present briefs.

Leave Austria Alone, Aim of 3-Power Pact

Italy, France and Britain Set to Warn Reich Not to "Meddle."

Paris, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—A three-power warning to Germany that Austria must not be meddled with was reported virtually agreed on tonight by Great Britain, Italy and France.

A public declaration forming a "moral bloc" of the big powers would be signed under such a project in an effort to "frighten" Nazis from attempting to overpower Austrian Chancellor Dollfuss.

The pronouncement was proposed by Premier Mussolini of Italy, who is leaving no stone unturned to keep Austria a buffer state between Fascism and Nazism.

Final decisions in the matter were considered probable during interviews tomorrow among Capt. Anthony Eden, British lord privy seal; Premier Doumergue of France, and the French foreign minister, Louis Barthou.

French statesmen insist that tri-power action will smooth the way for a League of Nations decision, rather than prevent Dollfuss from taking the question to the Geneva body.

The proposed Italo-Franco-British manifesto, it was understood, will say the powers believe that a free Austria is a keystone of peace in Central Europe, but will not contain threats of what may happen if Dollfuss should be forced to capitulate to the Nazis.

The Chamber of Deputies foreign affairs committee today urged the French government to take energetic action to keep Austria free.

Premier Doumergue and the Czechoslovakian foreign minister, Edouard Benes, agreed today that cautious, nonmilitary aid to Dollfuss would be the best way to prevent Nazi domination there.

London, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Sharp international conflict broke out between the British and Italian governments today over Rome's proposed three-power concerted action to preserve the independence of Austria.

The controversy followed a call on Sir John Simon, foreign secretary, by the Italian ambassador, Dino Grandi, who presented the Italian proposal. Sir John refused to join in a three-power declaration on the Austrian situation, and used language regarded as implying condemnation of the ruthless action of Chancellor Dollfuss in suppressing the Socialists.

Chased by Blazing Meteor, Mail Pilot Tells of Escape

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 16 (U.P.).—The strange experience of being bombarded from space by a meteor was described by Pilot Hiram Sheridan on his arrival here with the eastbound night American Airways mail plane from Fort Worth, Tex.

Sheridan said just before he reached Texarkana he saw the meteor break into flame as it struck the earth's atmosphere and describe a huge arc, coming directly at the plane.

"I watched it for a minute or two," the pilot said, "and realized that it was coming straight at me. I changed my course and put on speed, but it looked like it would strike the plane in spite of all I could do.

Robert Hit By Shake-Up In Treasury

Several Heads Lopped, With More Slated for Removal.

Administration Friends Dropped in Move for "Efficiency."

By Raymond Clapper. A major move was made by Secretary of Treasury Henry Morgenthau yesterday as part of a broad cleaning out of his department in which he is replacing key officials with men of his own choosing.

He took control of public building construction away from Assistant Secretary L. W. Roberts, jr., widely known as "Chip" and as the prince of good fellows in the circle of Roosevelt friends.

This control, involving building contracts running into many millions of dollars a year, was placed in the hands of a hard-boiled naval officer, Admiral C. J. Peoples, who has had long experience in huge purchasing for the Navy.

It was the latest of a series of strokes by which the new 42-year-old Secretary of Treasury is effecting a complete change of pace in the vast Treasury Department. Numerous faces have changed in the process. More are expected to go.

Drive for "Efficiency." Secretary Morgenthau is engaged in a double-barreled campaign. One purpose is to improve the efficiency of the Treasury Department. The other is to break up the "infused racket" which for years has been strong, particularly around the internal revenue unit where tax lawyers in many instances played upon friends inside the Internal Revenue Bureau.

His campaign is unique because the heads which have fallen have been those appointed under the present administration, while William H. Woodin was technically Secretary of the Treasury.

Further drastic lightning down on lawyers who practice before the Treasury is coming shortly. Secretary Morgenthau has an old New York friend, Charles C. Burlingham, former president of the New York City Bar Association, at work revising regulations governing lawyers who appear before the Treasury in tax cases and other legal matters.

One Treasury official said yesterday that under the loose regulations which have been in effect since the early part of the Harding regime, "a lawyer has to commit murder before the Treasury does anything to him."

Newspaper Man Ends Life in Time To Make Edition

Copenhagen, Denmark, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—C. A. Arnfast was a newspaper man. His life was ruled by the clock. His newspaper, the Aarhusposten, went "on the streets" at noon, and news had to be written, set into type, and printed before that hour.

Today the Aarhusposten had a scoop—the exclusive story of Arnfast's death, just in time to make the edition.

The story of his death was written by Arnfast himself in a note to a fellow reporter: "I have shot myself. I am no joy nor of sufficient use to anybody in the world. I have been in the hospital for a long time, and I am tired of it. I am going to die. I am going to die. I am going to die."

He said the telegram she dispatched yesterday, telling of a $60,000 bequest by "Madame Dickinson, her grandmother in Chicago," originated 2 miles from the farm where she worked.

Friend Will Scatter Stunt Flier's Ashes

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 16 (U.P.).—The body of Capt. W. Merle Nelson, Los Angeles stunt flier, who was burned to death Wednesday night at New Orleans when his plane crashed, was brought here today for cremation.

In accordance with Capt. Nelson's wishes, a friend will scatter his ashes over the New Orleans Airport, possibly Sunday.

Spanish Castle Robbed Of $390,000 Cross

Caravaca, Spain, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—A reward of 20,000 pesetas (about $2,000) was offered today for the return of a highly prized gold cross, which disappeared from the historic Caravaca Castle.

The treasure, which is valued at $390,000, has been stolen several times in the past, but always has been returned since it could not be sold.

Roosevelt Widow Sick.

New York, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, widow of the former President, is confined to her home with a severe cold, it became known today when she was unable to attend a reception for winners in a contest conducted by the Women's Roosevelt Memorial Association.

Cancellation of U. S. Air Mail Contracts Upheld by Court; Black Attacks "Spoils Plot"

Army Ready to Fly Mail; Brown Prepares to Tell Story.

Aviation's Future Fine, Senator Says

Fish Demands Farley Quit Committee, Assails Order.

By Martha Dalrymple. The famous "spoils conference" to arrange the award of air-mail contracts in 1930 were the subject of another attack last night by Senator Black (Democrat), Albama, chairman of the special Senate Mail Contract Investigating Committee.

Speaking over the radio, the Senator stated that the conferences which former Postmaster Brown denies were evidences of collusion, were for the purpose of "allocating certain air-mail contracts to certain selected companies participating in the meeting."

"The law expressly protects the taxpayers from contracts which are the result of combinations to prevent competitive bidding," said the committee chairman. "That there was such an agreement the written minutes and notes of the meetings establish. The letters of the officers of the companies themselves and much sworn testimony by the participants, conclusively prove such combination."

Predicts Rosy Future. Predicting a rosy future for the aviation industry, despite anti-airmail warnings that cancellation of all domestic contracts would ruin the whole business, Senator Black declared that it required "both honesty and courage to cancel those fraudulent air-mail contracts."

Meanwhile, Brown, who issued his blast Thursday take off contending that the present Postmaster General, James A. Farley, was unjustified in cancelling the contracts, was making preparations to appear Monday morning before Black's committee.

The event has been long promised, since the committee has already heard several witnesses explain their interpretations of Brown's postal administration.

Army Prepares for Task. The Army is also in the throes of preparing for taking over all air-mail routes by midnight Monday. Lieut. Col. Henry H. Arnold, commander of the Western Zone headquarters at Salt Lake City, Utah, announced the names of six officers who will comprise the headquarters staff, and other details of operations. He said that all the planes in his zone will be equipped for blind flying and will have short wave radio sets.

Associated Press dispatches from Newark, N. J., say that 70 planes will take off at midnight Sunday night, although Maj. B. O. Jones, commander of the Eastern Zone, is confident that only 30 will be needed at first.

"We'll carry the mail. Don't worry about that," he is quoted as promising. "We'll even carry an elephant if they bring it to us, even if we have to cut it up to get it aboard."

The same blithe optimism colors all reports from the various air mail headquarters in the country as they prepare to carry on during the emergency.

The House Post Office Committee held a secret session in consideration of the matter.

Missing Amherst Alumnus Sought

W. C. Burns Left to Visit College Jan. 11.

Wylie C. Burns, 62, of 4006 Seventh street northwest, who has not been heard from since he left his home January 11 to attend an alumni dinner at Amherst College, was sought by police yesterday in which the Washington department was cooperating.

Burns' relatives informed police, left Washington in company of three other alumni whose names are not known. Failing to hear from her husband after several days, Mrs. Burns said she communicated with Amherst. She reported that college authorities could not locate him.

Mrs. Burns said she could advance no reason for her husband's disappearance.

Lucrezia Bori's Gems Taken by Robbers

New York, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Disguised as messengers, two men invaded the apartment of Lucrezia Bori, opera diva, today, trussed a maid and a porter, and escaped with a jewel case of undetermined value.

Miss Bori is on a concert tour.

Bushman-Ponselle Engagement Broken

Matinee Idol to Woo Woman He Wed 32 Years Ago; Singer Says "Love Will Find a Way;" Ex-Wife Has "Nothing to Say."

Chicago, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—The marriage license Francis X. Bushman purchased a week ago for himself and Carmela Ponselle of the opera is just a scrap of paper now, the great lover of the silent movies said today.

The wedding is off, by agreement. Miss Ponselle has gone East. And his next ceremony, said the erstwhile matinee idol, may be a retake of his first scene at the altar 32 years ago.

The sudden turn of romantic events, Bushman related, was the result of publicity attendant upon the announcement of his engagement to Miss Ponselle.

Sixteen years ago, he had been divorced from Mrs. Josephine Bushman, of Beverly Hills, Calif., after 16 years of marriage. They had had five children. The day after that divorce, he married his co-star of the silent films, Beverly Bayne. They had one child, and a divorce. But when the children of his first wife read of the impending marriage of their father to Miss Ponselle, they got busy by telephone and telegraph. "Please call up mother," they pleaded.

Bushman did, while Miss Ponselle was here with him. The telephone call to the first Mrs. Bushman kindled memories. He had married the lovely, blonde, Josephine Fladue, of Baltimore, in 1902, when he was 18.

"Carmela and I talked it over. She is big and fine, and she decided for the sake of the children we had better call it off," he said.

Bushman, as soon as present engagements permit, said he would westward bound for Hollywood with one purpose, to wit: To woo again the first Mrs. Bushman.

New York, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Carmela Ponselle admitted today her engagement to Francis X. Bushman.

Shoemaker Forces Lorton Graft Inquiry

Barnard Denies Charges; Sanitation Also Due for Scrutiny.

A dual investigation of charges of graft and corruption and insanitary conditions in the District Reformatory at Lorton appeared certain last night as the result of a one-man campaign in Congress.

At the request of Capt. M. M. Barnard, 72-year-old superintendent of District penal institutions, and upon recommendation of the Department of Justice, the District Commissioners ordered an investigation by a Board of Public Welfare committee.

Meanwhile, Representative Shoemaker (Farmer-Labor), Minnesota, pressed his demand for a Congressional inquiry with assurance of support from House leaders. He said he would not be deterred by the District's investigation, which he predicted would "whitewash" the prison officials "as it always has done."

Barnard Enters Denial. District officials reacted with speed and vigor yesterday to charges against "The Lorton College of Graft" made by the House floor by Shoemaker the day before. Capt. Barnard appeared at the District Building early in the day and filed with the Welfare Board written denials of the charges in behalf of himself and four subordinates.

He also branded the superintendent "a liar" when told that Capt. Barnard had "whitewashed" the prison officials "as it always has done."

Cardinal's Office Robbed. Philadelphia, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Police reported that masked bandits entered the office of Cardinal Dougherty, head of the Catholic diocese, and escaped with approximately $2,800.

Scalpers Reap Riches on 'Hill' With Veterans Benefit Tickets

Many members of Congress have been victimized during recent months by promoters of veterans' benefit entertainments, Kenneth Romney, sergeant at arms of the House, revealed yesterday.

The favorite practice, Romney said, was to promote a dance for a Veterans of Foreign Wars post and then sell tickets to members of Congress for from three to five times what the post asked for them, keeping the difference. The usual custom, he said, is to ask from $3 to $5 for $1 tickets.

Many Congressmen have been coerced into buying the tickets under the threat of incurring the displeasure of the veterans' organization, Romney said.

One of the ticket salesmen, Luther Miles, of 417½ Eleventh street southwest, was arrested last Tuesday by House police, according to Romney, and admitted forging the name of W. S. Wilson, commander of Veterans of Foreign Wars Post No. 2460. Wilson declined to prosecute, and the case was dropped.

After being informed by the United States attorney's office that the men could not be prosecuted under the act barring solicitation in the Capitol, he was released. Romney said he was considering having them barred from the House Office Buildings and the Capitol.

The sergeant at arms said he has the assurance of James E. Van Zandt, Veterans of Foreign War commander, that the posts would be instructed not to lend their names to the promotion schemes.

T. W. A. Plea Denied as Court Rules Farley Acted Officially

Lacks Jurisdiction, Judge Knox Rules

Appeal to Be Pushed; Stage Cleared for Army Service.

New York, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—The Federal Government today won the first legal step in defense of its cancellation of air-mail contracts held by private companies.

Federal Judge John C. Knox dismissed the action of the Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., for an injunction to restrain Postmaster General James A. Farley and John J. Kieley, of New York, from carrying out Farley's order cancelling all contracts next Monday.

"Any action toward saying what instrumentality must be used to carry out mail is an action against the United States," said Judge Knox after Federal Attorney Martin Conboy and counsel for T. W. A. presented arguments.

"In the absence of its consent here to be sued I have no jurisdiction," Government Has Choice.

"It must be understood that this court has no opinion to express either on the wisdom or propriety of the acts of the Postmaster General. I am impressed with what seems to be the fact that carriage of the mail is essentially a function of the Government, and historically so."

"The Postmaster General and Kieley have acted in their capacities as representatives of the United States. I can not, it seems to me, give injunctive relief against them."

"Therefore, without extended discussion, I deny the motion."

John Thomas Smith, counsel to the T. W. A., of which Col. Charles A. Lindbergh is technical adviser, said that the company's next step is "an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, but we won't decide what we will do immediately. This is something that may go on and on."

The minute Judge Knox uttered the last word, denying T. W. A.'s motion for a temporary injunction pending hearing on a permanent restraining against the Postmaster General's cancellation order, Conboy was on his feet.

"I take it the court dismisses the entire action," he asked.

"That is so," replied the court, "and court is now adjourned."

Judge Knox's decision came after three hours of argument, with Smith charging that the company was "in-

NRA Oil Code Ruled Invalid

Not Operative, as Applied to Commerce Within State, Court Holds.

Dallas, Tex., Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Federal Judge William H. Atwell held today that provisions of the NRA petroleum code affecting marketing problems could not be enforced against operators dealing only in intrastate commerce. He dismissed charges the Government had brought against four Dallas filling station operators.

The Government had contended that the defendants, by employing men more than 48 hours a week and paying them less than $14.50 a week, as prescribed in the code, were placing an undue burden on interstate commerce because of the disadvantage such practices placed upon competitors, both within and without the State, who were complying with the code.

Sections of the Constitution which the defendants claimed the code violated were that forbidding the taking of property without due process of law, that guaranteeing the sanctity of contracts, and that reserving to the States all powers not given to the Federal Government.

The defense contended that the code went beyond any authority given Congress by the Constitution.

Two Children Killed As Train Hits Auto

Dallas, Tex., Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Two school children were killed and a teacher probably fatally injured today when an eastbound Texas & Pacific passenger train struck the teacher's automobile at the Eagle Ford crossing.

The children, named Dalton, were killed instantly. Mrs. Pearl Newton, the teacher, who had picked up the children on their way to school, was not expected to live.

House Group Calls Stock Market Chief

Whitney to Be Questioned on Opposition to Control Bill.

Richard Whitney, president of the New York Stock Exchange, has been asked to appear before the House Interstate Commerce Committee to explain opposition in some financial quarters to proposed stock market control legislation, the United Press learned last night.

He is expected to come here the latter part of next week.

Witnesses before the Interstate Commerce Committee today emphasized the necessity of legislation to remedy alleged abuses in stock and commodity market practices.

Dr. E. A. Goldenweiser, director of research and statistics for the Federal Reserve Board, said Federal regulation of stock markets would promote sounder banking and economic stability.

Market Usage "Diverted."

"The stock market had been diverted from its purpose and in some cases has become an instrument for economic evil," Goldenweiser said. He recommended, however, that some modifications be made in the Rayburn-Fletcher bill to prevent restriction of credit.

Thomas Corcoran, counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, criticized stock market operations under present exchange rules.

"The little fellow has a better chance of recouping his market losses by playing the horses," he said.

Corcoran said the stock market bill originated in the Federal Trade Commission and that Ferdinand Pecora, Senate Stock Market Committee counsel, and members of his staff helped write it.

Came "in Dead of Night."

"A lot of fellows came down from New York in the dead of the night, also, to help draft the bill," Corcoran added. "Like everyone else in New York, they were afraid to talk about the bill."

Corcoran cited the so-called pool in alcohol stocks, now being investigated by the Senate Stock Market Committee, as an indication of how operators "took the shirts off of stockholders."

Accustomed to details of huge fortunes made in Wall street during the boom years, the Senate committee listened today to an unaccustomed tale of profits gained while the depression was at its peak.

Russell R. Brown, chairman of the board of the American Commercial Alcohol Corporation, received a retroactive raise in salary from $21,000 to $50,000 a year at the close of 1933, after the corporation had made sensational earnings, testimony showed.

Good Will Baggied.

Evidence disclosed also that in the spring of 1933 the good will and business of Coxon, Inc., then under process of organization by American Commercial Alcohol, were valued at $30,000. Later, in a balance sheet submitted to the New York Stock Exchange, the value of the good will and licenses was placed at $300,000, more than the rest of the concern's assets.

Brown, a witness before the committee, said he was unable to explain this discrepancy. The pool's total profit, it was testified, was $210,000.

Pecora also brought from Frank A. Altschul, chairman of the New York Stock Exchange's stock-listing committee, the admission that stock of the American Commercial Alcohol Corporation was listed on the exchange through an error in Altschul's office.

Cumberland Pythians Observe Anniversary

Cumberland, Md., Feb. 16 (Sp.)—Four hundred members of the Knights of Pythias assembled at Central Y. M. C. A. last night to observe the anniversary of the founding of the order.

Former State Senator William A. Gunter presided. Addresses were given by Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan and former State Senator David A. Robb, members of the order.

The celebration was the climax of a membership campaign that had been in progress for a year.

Bushman-Ponselle Engagement Is Off

ment to Francis X. Bushman is off. But she would not say it was by agreement, as Bushman announced in Chicago.

"I always say 'Love will find a way,'" she said. "I wouldn't say the wedding has been canceled by agreement."

"I think it's a lovely thing for his children that Francis has decided to go back to his first wife."

"There is to be no break-up between us because of this. We will always be—that is, he is still my best friend."

"Nothing to Say" (As Usual).

Santa Monica, Calif., Feb. 16 (P). Mrs. Josephine Flaudene Bushman, first wife of Francis X. Bushman, said she "had nothing to say, one way or the other."

Claims May Halt Road.

Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.)—Improvement of Federal Road 460, between Lynchburg and Forest, Va., may be abandoned because of unexpected claims for damages being advanced by land owners on the Mooreman road, which the State highway department planned to use as a cutoff.

Woodstock, Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.)—Nevin Hepper, of Washington, has been awarded $500 in a suit for $100 against his sister, Mrs. Virginia Nelson, of Mount Jackson, in Chubb County here for alleged board and auto driving expenses.

The youngsters selected are scheduled to receive Eagle Scout badges at the Scouts' quarterly court of award to be held tonight in Powell Junior High School. This is the highest emblem that can be achieved in scoutdom.

Mrs. Gillette is survived by her husband, two brothers, two sisters and her father. Funeral services will be held in St. John's Catholic church at 2 p. m. today. Burial will be in Georgia.

Virginia Delegates In High Carnival After Heavy Day

Richmond, Feb. 16 (P).—Apparently working on the theory that all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, the House of Delegates today topped off its busiest day of the session by holding high carnival.

Floor Leader Ashton Dovell, following Dan Porter, former Orange delegate, now in charge of alcohol permits for Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia and North and South Carolina, in the chamber, asked him to address the House.

"I hope," said Porter as he mounted the hustings, "that you will soon pass something to give those who like a demitisse before dinner, or cake after dinner the right to indulge. We want the people to get the demitisse and the cake and the State the revenue."

There was applause. When it died down Delegate Bandy offered a joint resolution. It provided that with the Senate not concurring the House should lend Delegate "Bully" Engle to the State in order to "qualify the noxious gases between the two houses." The resolution was adopted.

Socialists Driven Into Vienna Sewers

Schools, Theaters Open; Dollfuss Is Reported Marked for Death.

102 and the total of civilians killed at 137, of whom nine were women and two children.

In Socialist quarters, on the other hand, the aggregate losses of life throughout Austria were placed at nearly 1,800.

Before dawn, 20 insurgent riflemen appeared through sewer manholes and engaged in a brisk skirmish with Heimwehr soldiers. No one was reported hurt.

Through these roomy sewers, honeycombed the capital, defeated garrisons of the municipal department blocks shelled by government forces Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, escaped. They became the last stand of the tenacious fighters.

Sewers Hide Revolvers. Light artillery fire, explosions of grenades and machine-gun fire were reported by residents in the Stadt Park area this morning, as Socialists emerged from the sewers and attacked a nearby police station. The Socialists soon scurried again into their underground retreat.

Official but conflicting casualty figures began to appear. At the foreign office it was announced the aggregate death toll among the army, police, gendarmes, Heimwehr, and Catholic Storm Troops was 98.

At the same time, Vice Chancellor Fey declared the government forces lost "more than 100 dead and hundreds wounded."

Neither Fey nor the foreign office press chief ventured to name the figure for Socialist and non-combatant deaths, but the latter suggested "at least 100."

The unofficial aggregate death toll among the government forces was well above 1,000.

There were many strange evidences that normal life was returning. In the wrecked Karl Marx tenement, the remaining tenants were trying to bring about a semblance of order; on the splintered door of its model laundry, a placard enjoined "women who were scheduled to use the laundry Tuesday will please bring their clothes at 4 o'clock today."

Barbed Wire Pulled Down. The kindergarten in the shell-torn Karl Marx also had the notice, "Instruction will be resumed when other schools open."

Sightseers came in limousines to view the result of Wednesday's bombardment of the Floridsdorf section. Barbed wire barriers disappeared almost completely from the streets today, but were ready to be put up again when needed.

The situation in the provinces appeared more tranquil than in Vienna.

The superintendent of schools in Upper Austria ordered the reopening of schools tomorrow. Pupils, however, will have opportunity to attend funerals when necessary.

In Vienna, about 3,000 Socialists were held prisoners, many of them in a former automobile body factory and in the one-time imperial military barracks.

The Federal minister of education announced provincial schools will open tomorrow and the Vienna schools Monday. Universities, however, will remain closed until further notice.

In Styria, theaters will resume their usual schedules Saturday, and cafes will be permitted to remain open until midnight, instead of 7 p. m.

Vienna's street cars ran on all lines today. Buses also resumed service.

The engineer of an armored train which besieged the Karl Marx municipal apartment block Tuesday and participated in the battle in the Floridsdorf workers' section, died of wounds.

Heimwehr Always Active. Members of the Heimwehr played an important role in suppressing the rebellion, just as they have as Chancellor Dollfuss' supporters in recent Austrian politics.

In the Vienna workers' sections and in other cities, they fought side by side with police and regular soldiers.

The latter groups, however, were not included in the Socialist leaders' guerrilla orders, which were issued after a meeting, and which gave strict instructions that the attacks are to be directed only at Heimwehren.

Acts of sabotage against utilities and public services were decreed by the Socialists. As precautionary moves, Heimwehren occupied municipal fire department headquarters and installed their own trained men to control the independent fire department communications system.

Home Guard leaders believed Socialists had used fire department telephone lines for their own communications.

Sections of Vienna that earlier this week were bombarded with shells today were stormed by thousands of handbills dropped from airplanes. A message of peace and better things to come rained upon bomb-wrecked Floridsdorf and other outlying areas.

"What have you been fighting for?" the leaflets demanded. "Where are your leaders, Otto Bauer and Julius Deutsch?"

"In a moment of greatest danger, your conscienceless leaders shamelessly left you in the lurch and betrayed you."

"They have fled to foreign countries—taking with them money they stole, so now they can live in glorious debauchery."

"What Marxist leader, what Red political power, risked his life with you on the barricades or died a hero's death?"

"Abandon this blood-drenched class war and join the true brotherhood of the Austrian Heimwehr; cooperate in building up a new Austria!"

Fascist Steam Roller Is Turned on Jews. Vienna, Feb. 16 (U.P.).—Austria's new Fascist steam roller tonight began crushing representatives of various racial elements which, for years, had played prominent roles in the Socialist domination of Vienna.

Chancellor Dollfuss ordered the arrest of prominent Jewish Socialists as the first move to turn the republic into a Fascist dictatorship similar to that of Mussolini in Italy.

His surprise attacks on the Jews included certain citizens of Czechoslovakian blood and pro-Czechoslovakian politicians.

Among those taken was Emanuel Singer, internationally known Austrian liaison officer for the Zionist organizations.

The New Dealers

'Mule Driving' by Lewis Unionizes New Deal

Coal Operators Routed Into Open, Forced to Sign Code.

Victory Held Greatest for Organized Labor in Half Century.

The identity of the author of "The New Dealers" must remain undisclosed. Publication of the material in The Washington Post does not necessarily imply editorial endorsement of his views.

By the Unofficial Observer.

John Llewellyn Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, is the best labor fighter in the field, but a fighter is all that he is. Physically he looks like a cross between Bob La Follette and Fiorello La Guardia, mentally he is on a par with Jack Dempsey or Primo Carnera. Stout, plump, bull-necked, heavy-handed, he is 53 years old, a native of Iowa, who entered the Western mines, he got a job as labor lobbyist at the Illinois State Capital and so has not worked with his hands for over 25 years.

In 1908, old Sam Gompers took a fancy to him, pushed him up in A. F. of L. politics—which are only slightly less involved and sacramental than those of the College of Cardinals—and in 1920 had him elected president of the United Mine Workers. Lewis has held down this $12,000 per year job ever since and has made so many enemies that he was misrepresented as anything from a racketeer to a revolutionist.

In fact, he is neither. He simply behaves as any man would behave who had to wrangle with mules, miners and operators in the bloody angle of American industry. He can back down more aggressively than any man in the country. He called off the 1919 coal strike in the face of a Federal injunction and signed a Kentucky wage agreement the eve of the 1922 strike. On the whole, he has supplied skilled and aggressive leadership for a dying industry.

In three short months, he lifted the U. M. W. out of despair and made it the greatest single affiliate in the federation. He has embodied union labor in the New Deal and, with the support of the President, forced the coal operators out. In the open and compelled them to sign the coal code late in September, 1933—an industrial encyclical providing for the unionization of all the soft-coal mines in the basin of the Ohio Valley—the greatest single victory of organized labor in 50 years of desperate industrial warfare. Under Lewis, the first time in American history, the miners' union became something to be reckoned with, not just clubbed by deputy sheriffs and bullpupped by militia.

Chief symbol of the change which has come over industrial America is the elevation to the post of Assistant Secretary of Labor, of Edward F. McGrady, who was thrown out of Tennessee in 1923 when he was trying to organize the rayon workers. On that occasion, he was kidnapped from his hotel and violently ejected from the town by a mob of Southern citizens.

One of the original FRBC men, shortly after March 4 he received Farley's endorsement for the position of Assistant Secretary of Labor. Frances Perkins, however, balked. Suspecting a trick to conciliate Bill Green by planting an old federation wheel horse in the midst of her new department, she withheld her consent. It was not until McGrady was made assistant administrator in charge of labor relations for the NRA that Miss Perkins came to know him. Then she withdrew her opposition. His handling of the coal strike in the Frick Coke Co. and Pittsburgh Coal Co. won her support. One day at a Cabinet meeting she called Jim Farley aside. "I was mistaken about Mr. McGrady," she confessed, and a few days later he took the oath of office.

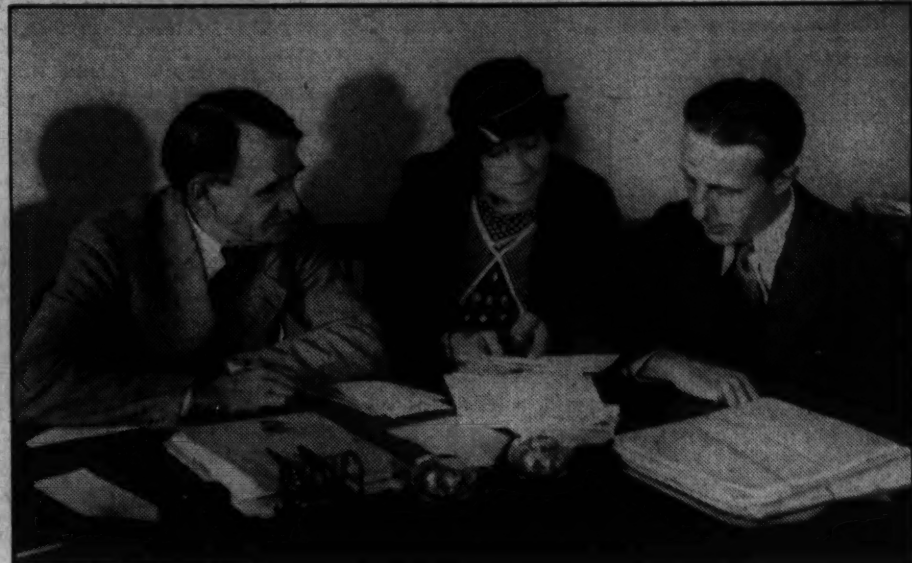

McGrady Driving Force in Labor Program.

Tall, brisk, powerful and blunt of speech, McGrady is one of the ablest men in the A. F. of L. and one of the driving forces in the New Deal's labor program. In this, he is an almost perfect contrast to the suave Leo Wolman, labor's economist in the NRA.

Wolman has been known for years as a liberal in the field of labor and industrial relations. Born in Baltimore 44 years ago, he was educated at Johns Hopkins and made teaching economics his life-work. Besides teaching at several universities, he served as investigator for the U. S. Commission on Industrial Relations in 1914 and was chief of the section on production statistics of the War Industries Board. He went to the Versailles conference as an economic expert and in 1921 was a member of the advisory board of the U. S. Unemployment Conference.

After the war, Wolman moved to New York, where he joined the faculty of the new school for social research and mixed in labor-industrial relations and the trade-union movement. He was a friend of Sidney Hillman and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, serving as arbitrator from time to time, and is the author of two books on the American trade-union movement. He is a member of the research staff of the National Bureau of Economic Research and since 1931 has been on the economics faculty at Columbia University.

Of medium height, medium proportions, dark and brisk, Wolman forms his own opinions and sticks to them. He is in Washington because Frances Perkins had him made a member of the NRA Labor Advisory Board, when that organization needed a man of first-rate intellect, sound theoretical knowledge and a broad social viewpoint to offset the purely practical viewpoint and policies of Green and Lewis.

Dr. Frederick Howe, Mrs. Mary Rumsey and Dexter Keizer, guardians of the consumers' pocketbook, in the New Deal set-up.

Wolman, Cynical Fabian, Is Monetary "Expert."

However, Wolman no longer ranks among the liberals of the New Deal, who are inclined to regard him with suspicion. He turned out to be an inveterate and cynical Fabian, ready to compromise in the hope of moving the labor line a few inches ahead of its jumping-off place, unaware that the breakthrough has occurred. His liberalism is limited by the ideal of a large public works program, unemployment insurance, and other social insurance schemes. He was also ill-advised enough to leave his own field and pose as a monetary expert, and he signed the remonstrance of hard-money Columbia professors against the Roosevelt gold policy in the autumn of 1933.

Probably Wolman realized the weakness of the NRA codes, against many of which he had protested, so criticism of him must not be based on a comparison between him and many others in the NRA, but on a comparison between what he did and what was expected of him. He could have made himself an outstanding liberal in the New Deal, linking the NRA with the liberals in the AAA. Instead, he gradually faded into the background.

Despite his intelligence and technical qualifications, he illustrates the fact that American labor, no less than American industry, is fatally muscle-bound in its mental processes.

Howe Is Spearhead Of Economic Coterie.

As vermouth appendix to the American industry under the NRA is what is generally known as the great alimentary system known as "Consumers' Group." Led by Frederick C. Howe, the grand old warrior of American reform, and Mrs. Mary Rumsey, the daughter of R. H. Hartman, the American "railroad king" of the early 1900's, this hopeful little assemblage of liberal sociologists and economists is trying to persuade the industrial dinosaurs to acknowledge its master, the man and woman who buy industrial goods. Unless people are given the power, through higher wages, lower prices and moderate profits, to buy and consume the output of industry, this group contends that there can be no recovery.

Frederick Howe is the spearhead of this economic coterie. He was brought into the original AAA as head of the consumers' council, but Mary Rumsey soon tied him up with the NRA consumers' advisory board and now that nearly all the codes are under the NRA, it is there that the battle for the consumer must be fought.

The idea of protecting the consumer at all was Tugwell's, and he, with Fred Howe and Mrs. Rumsey, was chiefly responsible for dragging various representatives of the consumers into the picture and building up strong organizations. However, Mrs. Rumsey made it her job to "cooperate" with Gen. John Brown and to keep the picture, with the result that her work was stymied from the outset. Howe had an easier time of it, because he had men like Wallace, Tugwell and Jerome Frank at the other end of the cooperation.

Mary Rumsey Proves Contrast to Howe.

On every hearing for an agricultural code or marketing agreement, the consumer has been represented—and by an unhesitating and unterrified spokesman.

From the start, Howe began to get out simple exhibits showing how much of the increased price of a pair of overalls or of a housewife's apron was due to the processing tax on cotton, how much to higher wages in the cotton mills, how much to better prices for raw cotton, and how much to increased profits.

His studies showed that the cotton industry was making a merciless clean-up, and he found the same thing true of other industries. This caused much indignation in business circles, which infinitely preferred the Johnsonian technique of suppressing all such information on general principles.

Lean, full of zip and humor at the age of 66, Howe is one of the most engaging figures in the New Deal. His life has been that of a peripatetic scholar, author and politician. He has lectured in several Western universities on law, taxation and municipal problems, and his books include studies of taxation, municipal government, Socialism and cooperation in America and in Europe. Following the Wilson debacle he became director for several years of the Sconset Summer School on the Island of Nantucket. He was brought into the New Deal picture for sentimental, as well as practical reasons, both as a stimulating survivor of the old prewar muck-raking and reform days, and as one who has never changed sides or grown weary in the fight for social justice.

In this, he is an interesting contrast to Mary Rumsey, who was born with a diamond-studded spoon in her mouth and who should, by all the laws of Karl Marx, be a convinced reactionary, for she is the daughter of a man who could and did swallow whole railroad systems before breakfast, and whose intellectual energy she has inherited.

Her education was unconventional, in the sense that she studied at Barnard College—where Raymond Moley was later to lecture—and specialized in biology and eugenics. She banded her debutante contemporaries into the Junior League, that organization which shows the daughters of the overworked rich how live the families of the overworked poor. Her father also made her attend directors' meetings in order that she should learn something of the realities of life among the overworked bankers.

Home Became Center Of Scientific Farming.

Her reaction was to marry Charles Cary Rumsey, poloist and sculptor, with whom she had gone fox-hunting near Middleburg, Va. This was in 1910. Twelve years later he was killed in an automobile accident, leaving her to manage her estate and take care of their daughter and two sons. The slow discipline of the soil and seasons on a North Virginia farm introduced her to the agricultural problem.

Her home became a center of scientific agricultural interest. She went ahead, organizing cooperative marketing associations for live stock and the emergency exchange association for the unemployed.

She belonged to the New Deal from the start, as an intimate friend of Frances Perkins, while her brother, Averell Harriman, was one of Roosevelt's staunchest and earliest supporters. The slow discipline of the soil and seasons on a North Virginia farm introduced her to the agricultural problem.

Under her and Howe is assembled a large group of economists and sociologists, the most important of whom include Dexter M. Keizer, executive director of the NRA; Robert S. Lynd, author of "Midwintertown," that extraordinary study of the town of Muncie, Ind.; Paul H. Douglas, and William Trufant Foster, of the economic vaudeville team of Fertile and Catching.

Of these, Keizer is pre-eminently the desk worker and rewrite man, and Lynd is the leg man and observer. "Keizer" is a Massachusetts man of 39, a graduate of Amherst in the class of 1920, with 14 years of Journalism and teaching to show for his education. He and Gardner Johnson—who is on the consumer's board of the Triple A and who is best known for his last-ditch fight to save Sacco and Vanzetti from the electric chair—began their newspaper careers together in Denver in 1920.

Robert S. Lynd hails from the Middle West, being a native of Indiana, where he saw the light of day 42 years ago. After an education at Princeton, Union Theological Seminary and Columbia, he took the publicity and editorial route to fame. From this he embarked on a long period of sociological research, beginning with the Small City Study for the Institute of Social and Religious Research, followed by some work for the Commonwealth Fund, and then for Social Science Research Council, of which he became permanent chairman. In 1929, he and his wife, Helen Merrell, published "Middletown—A Study in Contemporary American Culture," a book which dissected and analyzed a small American city with the objective impartiality hitherto lavished only on African villagers and the Pueblo Indians.

Douglas, tall and self-assertive, is professor of industrial relations at the University of Chicago. Forty-two years old and a native of Massachusetts, Douglas was educated at Bowdoin, Columbia and Harvard, before teaching at the University of Illinois, Reed College and the University of Washington, prior to his appointment at Chicago University. During the war he handled an industrial relations assignment for the Emergency Fleet Corporation and is the author of several standard studies on labor and economic problems, being an authority on "real wages"—i. e., purchasing power as distinguished from cash receipts.

Foster Advances Thesis Of High-Wage Level.

Foster, another New Englander, was born in Boston 55 years ago, and educated at Harvard and Columbia. After teaching at Bates and Bowdoin in 1910, he became first president of Reed College in Portland, Ore., where he introduced new educational experiments, including the abolition of intercollegiate athletics and the development of a really stimulating intellectual environment in a small college.

After ten years, Foster resigned to become director of the Pollak Foundation for Economic Research, in which capacity he wrote that dynamic series of books with Wadsworth Catchings—"Money," "Profits," "Business Without a Buyer," and "The Road to Plenty"—which did so much to indicate to our middle-minded industrial and financial leaders the fundamental characteristics of the capitalist system of distribution. He did much to advance the thesis of the high-wage level and to make business men vaguely aware of the fact that goods can not be sold unless somebody is allowed to have the money to buy them.

Foster was one of the first men to demand a huge public works program when the depression began to hit us. An energetic man, a bit of a rebel and an innovator, he is a good team-mate for Douglas. Together, and with the backing of men like Gardner Means, Thomas Blaisdell (a young professor of economics at Columbia whom Tugwell brought down), William E. Mosher (professor of political science at Syracuse), LeRoy Peterson, who helped to organize the Amalgamated Bank in New York City, and Gardner Jackson, who is consumed by the flame for social justice, they may succeed in indoctrinating the whole industrial police force with the one simple principle: that people can not pay high prices or low, yield low or high profits to industry, or enable business itself to continue, unless those people are given the means with which to buy.

Civil Ratings To Be Tested

Service Commission Will Try to "Humanize" Its System.

"Humanizing" the efficiency rating system now in use in Government service is among the plans of the Civil Service Commission, it was revealed yesterday.

After May 1, when the annual efficiency ratings are given, supervisory officials will try to find out, through discussions with employees whose ratings are poor, if there is any particular cause for their lack of efficiency. The commission hopes that remedies will be found.

However, the commission said, no new chart will be adopted until it has successfully passed practical tests. In the meantime, the present chart will continue in force this year, despite wide criticism against it.

The Council of Personal Administration, composed of personnel officers in the Government, has agreed to the necessity of a reform. Dr. L. J. O'Rourke, director of the commission, was the sponsor of the innovation.

Social Relief Work Called in Turmoil

Red Cross Official Pleads for Harmonized Plan.

The whole field of social work is in turmoil because of the depression and the subsequent vast relief programs. Robert E. Bondy, director of disaster relief, American Red Cross, told the Tuberculosis Institute meeting yesterday at George Washington University.

Mr. Bondy declared various types of social workers should correlate their activities.

"The great army of enlisted and trained tuberculosis fighters," he said, "must not regard their activities as separate but must cultivate the most cooperative relations with each other."

Soviet Signs Trade Pact With Britain

off since last April—contemplates and evening-up of the trade balance by 1938.

It does not contain provisions regarding the quantities of particular products to be exchanged. A concession given Britain was contained in a clause setting forth that the Russian use of British shipping for exports to Great Britain is to be taken into account.

Equality in Credit.

Regarding credit arrangements, Russia was assured of a proportionate equality with other countries in the British Government's credit guarantees.

Diplomatic privileges were restored to the Russian trade delegation.

The agreement contained no settlement of outstanding debt questions, and consequently was entitled a "temporary" pact.

A forthcoming debate in the House of Commons is expected to be a stormy one, but the treaty was considered certain of ratification. It can be denounced by either nation on six months' notice.

He was removed to Providence Hospital by the Bladensburg Rescue Squad. Clarence Brown, of Baltimore, reputed driver of the bus, was arrested by Prince Georges County Policeman W. E. Clifton on a technical charge of reckless driving. He was released on bond. The car was completely demolished.

Office Seekers Wait for Cues In Frederick

Likely Candidates Listed With Announcements Expected Soon.

Frederick, Md., Feb. 16 (Spl).—With the triennial city election four months away and Frederick County primaries in September looming ahead, candidates for office are coming forward rapidly. A number already have announced campaign plans.

The last General Assembly reduced the number of commissioners from five to three and cut the salary from $1,440 to $1,000 annually.

The salary of the county treasurer, who collects about $1,000,000 annually in taxes and is custodian of this fund, was reduced from $3,000 to $2,250 per year. Thomas A. Chapline, the present treasurer, who is seriously ill, and George S. Allnutt are in the field for this office. Mr. Chapline having announced himself before he became ill. The names of Amos Burgee, county commissioner, and Allen M. Pitzer, who was defeated by the incumbent three years ago, also are mentioned for the office. Both are Democrats. John W. Grove, Democrat, another commissioner, and John Herschberger, one of the three judges of the orphans court, have announced themselves for register of wills. The incumbent, Melvin F. Shepley, Republican, is noncommittal about his plans. A. H. Derr, the only Republican commissioner, and John W. Holter and Roscoe C. Brown, also commissioners, have not divulged any political plans they may have.

George F. Smith, of Frederick; Archley R. Molesworth, Mount Airy, and Lewis F. Lochner, Liberty, former commissioners, and Alvey M. Etzler, Mount Pleasant, are mentioned as probable commissioner candidates.

Orphans Court Race.

In addition to the two present members, C. Newton Thomas, this city, and Louis C. Etchison, of Jefferson, and Lee Simmons, of Buckeystown, are running for judges of the Orphans Court. Other candidates are expected to enter the race also.

Four avowed candidates, Chief of Police William F. Steiner, B. Frank Doherty, deputy sheriff, Roy M. Hill, traffic officer, and John E. Crum, Woodboro, have announced as candidates for sheriff. Capt. Guy Anders, Company A, M. N. G., is regarded as a likely candidate, and the name of former Sheriff William C. Westphaler also has been mentioned.

Former State's Attorney William M. Storm has been suggested by Democratic leaders as a candidate for the State Senate. It is known that Mr. Storm could get the nomination without a primary contest, and while he has not committed himself, the impression prevails that he may take the nomination. Edward S. Delaplaine is in line for the Republican nomination if he enters to have it. Mr. Delaplaine was elected to the General Assembly some years ago by a large majority. Both he and Mr. Storm are leading members of the Frederick bar.

State's Attorney Walter E. Sinn, Republican, will be a candidate to succeed himself and likely will be renominated. The name of E. Austin James, city attorney, also has been mentioned for this position. It is thought that Sherman P. Bowers, Democrat, who was defeated by Mr. Sinn by a small majority, will again be the Democratic nominee. While no announcements have been made for the General Assembly, friends of Harry W. LeGore declare he will be nominated without opposition if he is inclined to accept another term. LeGore also has been mentioned in connection with the State Senate nomination. Casper E. Cline, Jr., Democratic member of the last House, has stated definitely that he will not be a candidate for reelection. As a rule both parties have trouble securing suitable candidates to run for this office, because the salary of $5 per day does not cover expenses and because the term of office is but three months. Anderson H. Etzler, Thurmont; D. Charles Flook, Petersburg, and Dr. John Nicodemus, Walkersville, members of the last House, have not indicated a desire for renomination.

Lloyd C. Culler, former mayor, a Democrat, has announced himself as a candidate for another term. After serving two consecutive terms, Mr. Culler was defeated, at the last city election by the present mayor, Elmer F. Munshower, a Republican. While the latter has stated that he has not made up his mind, his friends say he will again head the city ticket. No other Republican candidate has been mentioned up to this time and it is generally felt that in case Mr. Munshower desires renomination, it will go to him without opposition.

Aubrey A. Nicodemus, Republican, city register and tax collector, whose office is regarded as the best plum of the municipal government, has announced himself for another term. The name of Frank X. Staley has been mentioned as a probable Democratic candidate. The aldermen, August T. Brust, president; Charles T. Butcher and Herbert S. Schroeder, Democrats, and G. Hunter Bowers and Charles P. Hiteschew, Republicans, have been mentioned as likely candidates to succeed themselves. Others mentioned include former Aldermen George W. Shipley and John S. Rann, Democrats, and Osborn Schade and Edward P. Oden, Republicans.

Three Candidates Withdraw. Roanoke, Va., Feb. 16 (Spl).—Three of the original 15 candidates who filed for seats on city council subject to the Democratic primary, April 3, have withdrawn from the race. J. V. Boxley, a contractor, withdrew yesterday, saying he expected to be out of the city much of the time. D. L. Armistead and George T. Miller withdrew earlier this week.

Battle Wagons Turn to Mail Wagons

Army pilots are shown detaching machine guns from a bomber as the vast task of transforming the Army Air Corps into an airmail carrier goes on. This peace-like picture was snapped at March Field, Calif., even as the roar of war from Europe was transmitted to America through newspaper headlines.

Cancellation of Air-Mail Contracts Upheld by Court

noent" of any wrongdoing and deprived of its property without "due process of law" and Conboy asserting that the company's only right of appeal was to the Court of Claims for money damages.

The action was filed by the company after Col. Lindbergh, in a telegram to President Roosevelt, which drew White House criticism, charged that the cancellation was unfair because the company had been denied a hearing.

In the course of the argument Smith repeated the company's offer to carry the mail without cost to the Government for a period of 30 days, during which time a hearing would be held to determine whether the company was in legal possession of its contract.

The argument was on an order issued against Farley and Kiehl directing them to "show cause, if any they have, why they should not be restrained and enjoined pending the hearing and determination of this suit from in any manner enforcing or attempting to enforce" the order which annuls the company's air mail contract at midnight next Monday.

Conboy challenged the jurisdiction of the court at the very outset. "The suit is against the Government," he said, "and it is our contention the court is without jurisdiction to grant the bill of injunction."

No Precedent Known.

"Are there any cases where a court has restrained a Cabinet officer in the matter of a contract?" asked Judge Knox.

"I know of no such case," the Federal attorney replied.

Conboy based his argument on an old case, which involved the cancellation of a contract by former Assistant Postmaster General Daniel C. Roper.

He said the United States Supreme Court in the case upheld the judgment of the District Court of the District of Columbia, which was to the effect that the only relief for the complainant was in the Court of Claims "for such money damages as he might be able to show."

The case was strikingly similar to the present one, Conboy said, and "neither is outside the general rule that the United States can not be sued without its consent."

Smith, replying to Conboy, maintained the opposite contention. The suit was not against the United States, he argued, but against officers of the United States, to restrain them from improper acts.

At one point Smith outlined the specific powers of the Postmaster General as he understood them. Judge Knox smiled:

"In other words he can starve you to death?"

"Yes," said the attorney, "he can starve you to death."

"Then why can't he kill you outright?" asked Judge Knox.

"Because we have certain rights and redress under the law," Smith replied.

At another point in the proceeding Judge Knox declared:

"The only question involved is the right of the judicial branch of the Government to say to the executive branch that it shall carry out its acts according to specific formula. That seems to be the basic question."

Violated Congress' Intention.

In answer to this Smith contended that Farley violated the intention of Congress when they cancelled the air contracts.

"Perhaps he ought to be impeached," the Judge said.

Smith swept aside the suggestion, asserting that he did not believe that Congress could dismiss the Postmaster General and that he was not interested in that question.

When the attorney dwelt at length on the value of aviation to the country, Judge Knox cut it with:

"Am I not compelled to consider this only in the light of a commercial contract, despite the sentiment we have for aviators and their value in war times?"

Smith agreed.

"In terms of dollars and cents?" the court added.

"In terms of dollars and cents, and in pains and penalties," Smith answered.

Smith, asserting that the company's contract should not be subject to the whims of politicians in Washington, added:

"All that we seek is an injunction against a nullity."

"The act of an executive officer not founded on law is a void act."

"I submit that there is no justification in law and no justification in fact for cancellation of this contract."

"I repeat we are willing to carry the mails for 30 days free and to suffer any penalty that we might incur by so doing."

U. S. Officials May Be Named In Army Quiz

New Evidence Is Found and List of Expected True Bills Grows.

their session, which lasted well into the afternoon, that the investigation may go on for several days and that a report can not be expected sooner than late next week.

Among the witnesses yesterday was Robert Fehner, director of emergency conservation work and head of the Civilian Conservation Corps. Supplies for the CCC have been purchased through the War Department and the purchase of these supplies and proposals to sell such supplies are being gone into thoroughly. It also was indicated that the jury was interested in the recent plan to buy 700 automobiles through the War Department for the CCC. The plan was blocked by a ruling of Comptroller General McCarl.

Fehner also is believed to have testified concerning the proposed sale of raincoats by Silverman for use of the CCC. Silverman was blocked in a plan to sell raincoats he had bought from the Government for 25 cents each back to the Government at $1.37 apiece.

Ressie Fact Probed.

The jury also was going into the alleged arrangement by Silverman to sell back to the War Department underwear he had bought from the department. Silverman, in a recent statement, said he had entered into a contract with the War Department for sale of the underwear at no profit to him in exchange for an understanding that he could purchase surplus supplies and equipment "at prices agreed upon." Silverman says such a contract was entered into last December, but was never executed.

Silverman has announced that he is willing to tell all he knows of his dealings with the War Department, but he has not been called by the jury and there was no indication that he would be called.

It is possible that the inquiry is extending to supplies bought for the CCC other than those in which Silverman was interested. These include the purchase of stoves and fire extinguishers, about which there have been complaints.

Auto Witnesses.

The jury got back into alleged dealings of certain individuals who are said to have represented to automobile manufacturers that they could assure them business with the War Department in return for a fee.

In this connection, the jury heard Joseph B. Cotton, vice president of the Four Wheel Drive Co. of Chicago, truck manufacturers, and Thompson Short, Washington representative of the corporation. The jury is seeking to determine whether specifications were changed to favor certain manufacturers of automobiles and trucks. Cotton and Short were the last witnesses heard before adjournment for the week-end.

The fourth witness heard yesterday was Capt. Thomas H. Nixon, of the Army Ordnance Department. He is believed to have testified to details of the purchase of Army supplies.

The nature of additional evidence was not revealed, but it was indicated that the scope of the inquiry had been broadened and that more persons were involved than previously had been involved.

Indictments Expected.

It was believed certain that persons who acted or sought to act as agents in dealing with the department would be indicted and that in addition the testimony indicates the guilt of one or more persons involved in the automobile business, as well as one or more officials.

District Attorney Leslie C. Garnett and David Price, chief assistant District Attorney, who is in direct charge of the investigation, refused to reveal names of witnesses, other than Woodring, who will be called next week. They are working closely with the Department of Justice which started investigation into War Department contracts nearly a month ago, when evidence of alleged irregularities was presented to a House committee and relayed to President Roosevelt.

Salesman Still Sought.

The grand jury investigation has been going on for nearly two weeks. The jury having heard numerous representatives of automobile concerns, and many Army officials. The probe was opened after the War Department issued an order stating that it would no longer do business with Silverman.

At the same time it was revealed that the Justice Department had been working on the investigation and that President Roosevelt had stopped the letting of contracts for Army motorization. Contracts involving only $600,000 of the $10,000,000 motorization fund have been awarded.

Garnett said yesterday that he still is eager to obtain testimony of Frank Spelcher, inner tube salesman, but that Justice Department agents still were unable to find him.

West Virginia Acts on Longer School Terms

Bill to Guarantee 8 Months Instead of 4 Passes Lower House.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 16 (Spl.).—Plans were made today by West Virginia legislators to guarantee an 8-months' term of school throughout the State through appropriations for teachers' salaries. Communities and districts having a nine-months' term are expected to make up the additional month's expenses.

Action was taken by the House of Delegates in passing and sending to the Senate a bill doubling the present guarantee of four months, which sponsors said would require an additional appropriation of $4,797,000. An appropriation of $5,500,000 was made earlier in the session for teaching salaries for four months.

Adjourn in Deadlock.

Before adjournment until Monday the House went into a deadlock with the Senate over the bill authorizing municipal ownership of electric power plants, sponsors of the bill were "battered" by the Senate. Amendments were rejected on motion of Delegate Rush D. Holt (Democrat), Lewis, sponsor of the measure.

The House gave final approval to a bill establishing a central mail office in the Capitol as an economic measure. On motion of Delegate Byron B. Randolph (Democrat), Harrison, it killed a bill passed yesterday permitting any levying body to use unrequired debt levy allocations for current expenses, receiving from him a supplanting measure limiting the use of such transferred funds to cities only.

Liquor Draft Forwarded.

The House Judiciary Committee reported out favorably a new draft of the State monopoly form of submitting prohibition repeal to the people. The new draft, which leaves the monopoly principle unchanged, was approved by Senator Charles E. Hodges (Democrat), Monongahela, who sponsors the State monopoly plan through the Senate. It reads as follows:

"The Legislature shall enact laws regulating the manufacture, storage, sale and transportation of intoxicating liquors, but the sale of such liquors for beverage consumption within the State shall be made only by the State."

The Senate Judiciary Committee recommended passage of a bill permitting liquor advertising, now prohibited.

Before recessing the Senate approved the Huntington charter bill in accepting a second conference report. The bill now goes to the Governor. The Senate also agreed to a joint conference with the House over differences in a bill changing the status of county farm agents.

Kump Signs Assessor Law.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 16 (Spl.).—Gov. H. G. Kump has signed the bill authorizing county courts to name additional assessors and establishing the amount of bond to be posted by sheriffs and members of county courts.

The measure cuts the minimum bond of sheriffs from $40,000 to $25,000 and fixes the bonds for county court members at from $5,000 to $10,000, in the discretion of the court.

Three local measures have become law without the Governor's signature. They authorize the boards of education of Monongalia and Calhoun Counties to borrow Federal funds for school buildings and the West Virginia County court to borrow funds for a hospital.

A bill amending State laws to comply with Federal regulations for liens on crops was also signed by the Governor.

Peery Fights Tax Cuts.

Richmond, Feb. 16 (AP).—Gov. Peery today expressed opposition to House finance committee amendments which would reduce the revenue from his tax program for schools by $102,000.

"We stand by our original tax program and there are no substitute bills emanating from us," the Governor said today, commenting upon the committee action last night dropping off some proposed revenue increases from taxes on power companies and merchants.

"The merchants virtually admitted the principle of the tax code changing the tax basis from purchases to sales," he said. "They agreed with tax Commissioner Morrisett that the basis would be fairer even if we were not looking for additional revenue."

The Governor said he saw "no objection" to the proposal that the tax commissioner be given $15,000 with which to hire agents to check up and see that merchants paid their taxes.

New Officers of Fruit Society

W. Va. Fruit Appraisalment Is Protested

Horticulture Group Asks Revaluation Made for Orchard Loans.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 16 (Spl.).—West Virginia fruit growers, through resolutions adopted by the West Virginia Horticulture Society here this week and made public today, have requested a reappraisal of orchard properties. The growers also criticized the new automobile license law requiring a twelve-months license, declaring that fruit men in remote sections are unable because of weather conditions to use their motors the year round.

The society also protested against a proposed 25 per cent reduction in appropriations for the Department of Agriculture.

The resolutions in part follow: "Whereas, appraisements made by agents for Federal Land Bank for making loans to growers have been in the opinion of so many of our growers, very unsatisfactory, this society recommends a reappraisal where applicants request and the secretary shall so notify the heads of Federal Land Bank, National and district.

"Resolved, that this society appeal to Commissioner of Agriculture J. B. McLaughlin to assist our neighboring States in the battle to hold in check the Japanese beetle, and recognizing the lack of funds available to the State, we urge most forcefully the United States Department of Agriculture to aid our State financially in this imminent danger.

"We protest the proposed reduction of 25 per cent in appropriations for our Department of Agriculture, to do so would greatly handicap agriculture in providing and protecting the food supply for the people of our State.

"We protest the passage of the Van Seckler bill which is, we believe, intended to injure our extension system. If it, it seems not only make unavailable for our forward-looking farmer-teachers in agriculture (County agents) but will lose us the services of experts in all lines, and particularly in marketing, spray service, pruning, fertilizing, culture methods and credit.

"We believe the truck license bill in so far as it begins the license year July 1 instead of January 1 and requires a 12-month license fee to be a 'dirty deal' at farmers who live on dirt roads and can only use their motor vehicles about half the year, and at orchardists who use trucks for fall delivery of apples and which trucks are stored the remainder of the year.

Other Resolutions.

"We ask that cooperative associations be exempted from the provisions of the revenue bill proposed, which lays a 1 per cent tax upon assessed valuation of corporations.

"We oppose harmful reductions in appropriations having to do with production and marketing of farm crops. West Virginia is so far below being self-supporting in farm production that it seems better business to supply ourselves than to buy elsewhere.

"We request all fruit growers of our State to register with the State Horticulture Society that helpful information may be supplied them.

"We ask the commissioner of agriculture and the Federal fruit inspection authorities to administer and enforce our grading, packing and inspection law that the practice of misbranding will be discontinued and that all fruit and vegetables be marketed according to law for the better protection of both producer and consumer.

"We commend those who have been administering our inspection service for faithful, efficient, helpful work. This service ranks high with our sister State. We trust it can be built to higher standards."

Hiring Speeded As Work Gains In Hagerstown

Private Jobs Taking Many Off CWA Roster; New Registry Planned.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 16 (Spl.).—A marked increase in employment here in private industry is reported by Brewer L. Stouffer, in charge of the Federal reemployment bureau here.

During the last week, foremen on county CWA projects reported to him that 50 workers had quit their jobs to take regular employment in private industry. Stouffer said as many more idle men have got private jobs here during the same period but have not reported the fact.

Because so many have found employment, a re-registration by the bureau is necessary in order to find how many are without work. The North American Cement Corporation, at Security, which resumed operations several weeks ago, has put to work 250 men. The Moller Motor Car Co., which received a contract for 810 taxicabs for New York City, has engaged nearly 300 workers. Many smaller factories have been forced since the holidays to speed up production to meet the demand for their products.

Even prospects of a labor shortage here are looming if business continues to pick up for the next month as it has in the last one.

The farms shortly will absorb several hundred workers, while two large PWA projects here—the new Washington County Hospital Building and the bridge across Antietam Creek on the Smithsburg-Hagerstown highway at Bridgeport—will give several hundred men employment for one year. A new sewerage system at Williamsport and a new water system at Clearspring, smaller projects, will absorb much labor in the rural sections. Road building in the county and improvements at the Antietam Battlefield also will give much employment.

St. Marys Work Gains.

Fleet Returns West This Fall, Norfolk Is Told

Standley Denies Report Scouting Force Will Stay in Atlantic.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.).—Admiral W. H. Standley, chief of naval operations, announced today that the United States fleet, which is scheduled to return to the Atlantic in June, will spend only a short time on the East Coast before returning to the Pacific.

The announcement came after a dispatch from Los Angeles was received quoting Admiral D. F. Sellers, commander in chief of the fleet, as saying the fleet's scouting force would remain in the Atlantic. Admiral Standley, in a long-distance conversation with Fairfield Hodges, secretary of the Norfolk Association, said Admiral Sellers must have been misquoted.

The fleet will remain intact and will return to the Pacific in November, Admiral Standley declared. The fleet will be reviewed off New York by President Roosevelt. The announcement that the fleet will remain only a short time here caused disappointment in naval circles and among business men. The fleet has been away from the Atlantic more than two years and it was thought the scouting force, composed almost entirely of cruisers, would remain here. A number of men attached to the fleet have their families in this section and others were expected to bring theirs. Secretary of the Navy Swanson has been asked to review the fleet in Hampton Roads after the New York review.

State Veteran Board Passes Virginia House

Senate Adjourns With Liquor Control Bill Work Unfinished.

Richmond, Feb. 16 (P.).—Both of the General Assembly houses adjourned today until Monday at noon, the Senate putting over a large number of amendments to the liquor control bill which had not been considered.

The House today passed 15 bills, killed 1 and engrossed 49 others within two hours.

The House bill setting up a veterans' service division in the office of the Governor and giving all veterans' organizations representation on the advisory board was passed after a futile effort by Charles W. Moss, of Richmond City, to have the bill recommitted for a public hearing.

Among the other House bills passed was the measure to prohibit the civil justice of Richmond from practicing law, which was sponsored by J. W. Chambers, of Norfolk, and opposed by one.

State Loan Bill.—Meanwhile Wilbur C. Hall, House finance chairman, and John Q. Rhodes, chairman of schools and colleges, introduced a bill to permit cities and counties to borrow from the State treasury fund and give delinquent tax tickets as security. The two joined in a statement asserting that the bill was not introduced in anticipation of any adverse action on the administration tax bill, but was to establish an eight-month school term.

Senator William M. Tuck, an opponent of the Governor's tax program, previously had announced he was preparing such a bill as a means of financing the schools without increasing taxes.

Simultaneously Delegates Quesenberry, of Augusta, and Coleman, of Norfolk, introduced a bill to abolish the general hospital board and to put the special boards of each of the hospitals and the colony for the feeble-minded in charge of the respective institutions.

County Inserts Revised Budget In CWA Plans

Water and Sewer Project Asked as Substitute in Spotsylvania.

Spotsylvania Courthouse, Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.).—Extension of Fredericksburg's water and sewer facilities into Elwood City and Mayfield, Spotsylvania County, was made possible yesterday by a decision to share approximately half the man hours expected for the County under the second phase of the Civil Works program. The decision was reached at a joint meeting of the Spotsylvania County board of supervisors and the school board.

The school board gave up 16,000 hours of its anticipated quota and other county projects were reduced from 11,550 to 6,270 hours, the supervisors abandoning a project to erect a building around the courthouse grounds.

With Spotsylvania's contribution of 21,280 hours and Fredericksburg's allotment the total available for the extension project is slightly less than 40,000 hours. The Elwood City project will require 73,000 hours, the Mayfield project 18,000 hours, a total of 91,000. Fredericksburg officials and county officials plan to seek an additional allotment from William A. Smith, State CWA administrator in Richmond, who may be able to provide for man hours rejected by other projects.

Levin J. Houston, Jr., city manager of Fredericksburg, Robert J. Payne, mayor of Fredericksburg, and Councilmen W. A. Bell and E. G. Hefflin stressed the importance of providing sanitation facilities in the two areas. Dr. J. Wallace Massey, chairman of the county school board, announced that after consulting with J. H. Chiles, superintendent of schools, he calculated that school projects might be completed in 16,000 man-hours rather than the 48,000 hours originally asked for.

There remain, in addition to the hours for school projects and the extension plan, 6,270 hours for county projects, divided between 780 for indexing the marriage register, 1,890 for walkways to buildings on the courthouse grounds, 900 for painting public buildings, and 2,700 for adding three additional rooms to the office of the trial justice and treasurer.

13 Park Workers Idle.—Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.).—Thirteen employees on the research staff of the Battelle Park here working with Federal Civil Works funds yesterday ceased work awaiting instructions from Washington. Extension of the park's search activities into the second phase of the CWA program is pending.

Whether the thirteen workers, employed here and at the court-house, and Spotsylvania County, are temporarily discharged or the work will be abolished has not been disclosed, George A. Palmer, chief historian of the park, said.

CWA Buying Agent Out.—Berryville, Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.).—A. F. Robertson, superintendent of schools for Clarke County, has tendered his resignation as purchasing agent for the Clarke County Civil Works Administration. A. B. Hummer, a local contractor, was named to replace him.

Mr. Robertson's resignation was due to the pressure of school work. Woodstock, Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.).—In response to a suggestion from William A. Smith, State CWA administrator, that towns and counties lose no time in submitting their second phase civil works projects, Augusta County's CWA committee yesterday forwarded several projects to the State.

Projects approved included work at the Waynesboro airport, 8,610 man-hours; 11 road projects, 147,400 man-hours; one Waynesboro street project, 1,200 man-hours.

The committee urged the administrator to give first preference to school projects already submitted to him.

Those attending the county committee meeting were J. Frank Harper, chairman; W. L. Bradshaw, W. N. Danner, Col. T. L. Rorer, W. E. Driver, Superintendent of Schools A. C. Gilkerson, A. B. Ellis, county administrator for the CWA, and Miss Elizabeth Brooke, welfare superintendent.

Real Beauty Recipe Is Free

Billion-Dollar Annual Cost of Skin and Hair Treatments Ignores Lesson, Taught by Jesus, That True Charm Comes From Healthy Spirit.

By William T. Ellis.

Barber shops open to the eyes of all passers-by are common, but I confess to a distinct shock when I first saw Miami "beauty shops" doing business behind plate glass windows, with all the operations in plain sight. One woman was fastened to a weird machine that was giving her a permanent wave; another was having her eyebrows plucked and being manicured at the same time, and a third was undergoing some sort of mud pack or facial massage that was beyond my understanding.

This might be called the seamy side of the immemorial quest for beauty, and it reminded me of the billion dollars spent every year—mostly in vain—in the cosmetic and "beauty shop" business. But mostly the unpleasant sight, with its vulgar lack of reticence, set me to thinking that real beauty does not come in show windows, nor yet in crowded "beauty parlors." The great transformation of human lives that puts new light on the eyes, new vigor in wrinkles and imparts the radiance of peaceful personality takes place in secret—in the quiet hours of reading and thought and purpose; in the closet of prayer and worship; in the secluded rendezvous of the spirit with God. True beauty is soul deep and develops from within outward. It is a reflection of the dominant purpose of life. Somehow, there has come to me a great compassion for these many women with hard, tired eyes whose faces advertise the fatigue of the "beauty shop" art. They have all gone shopping in the wrong place for the boon they covet.

An Ancient Physician's Way.

This present lesson deals with the better methods of the long-ago Physician of Souls. In two crowded chapters Matthew tersely tells how Jesus made over lives that sought Him. He cured all sorts of human afflictions, and gave sight, hearing, cleansing, strength and newness of life to many varieties of needy ones. Helpfulness is the great orthodoxy. Jesus was always helping people; the briefest biography of Him says "He went about doing good." Write it down as a fundamental truth that the Christian, the preacher, that is, the one who is definitely and continuously helping people is heretic, false to the primary teaching and example of Christ. Soundness of doctrine is an empty bubble of words unless it is accompanied by constant and versatile helpfulness of the near and things of people. The magnificent way in which men and women have helped one another in these years of depression is proof of the real religious soundness of the great mass of mankind.

Lack of this simple, old-fashioned Christian spirit of practical helpfulness and unselfishness is proof of soul sickness. I have recently been sojourning in a small hotel, where one of the guests is a neurotic. Literally all his talk is of himself and of his symptoms. Whenever he can buttonhole another guest, he pours into his ear tales of his operations with his aches and of his experiments with doctors. Of course, the guests avoid him as if he had the plague—which he has, the plague of a self-centeredness. The poor man is sicker than he knows, for he is completely selfish. If he could get out of himself he might get out of his lesser ailments.

Down to the Root of Things.

Contrast all this sort of thing with the rugged normalcy of Jesus. The particular fragment of Matthew's record which is assigned for present consideration begins, "And He entered into a boat." Jesus was an out-of-doors man. He was as much at home in a boat as a synagogue. He mingled with crowds more than he meditated with books. Human beings and their needs interested Him supremely. He "saw life clear, and saw it whole."

Out of His close and varied experience of life, Jesus understood the relative importance of things. He did not underestimate people's need for food, for diversion, for healing and for intellectual interests. To all of these He ministered. But He perceived that the root ailment of mankind was simply sin. To heal this was His mission. His times, like our times, were sin-sick. Things were wrong because human hearts were wrong.

I wonder what Jesus thinks about His mumbled, bewildered disciples today, who are mumbling pious platitudes and half-understood ec-nomie theories in the face of one of the great crises of human history? Does He not yearn to hear the clear, courageous voices of some followers who will point out, in unhesitating and contemporary speech, that what ails the world today is a direct result of human sinning—a rank disobedience to the explicit commands of God? And that things will never really get right until men repent and change their ways? All the codes and covenants that can be devised will be futile until men confess their sins and turn to righteousness.

A Man Who Had Friends.

In one dramatic and familiar incident, which is part of the lesson story, Jesus put this profound truth into explicit words. It was the case of the paralytic, borne by four friends, who could not come near to the Master because of the crowds. Undaunted, they climbed up on the roof and tore a hole in it big enough to let their friend through, as they lowered him tenderly down in front of the Physician, amidst the amazed crowd. Of course, some onlookers, strong for "property rights," were noisily indignant over this unwelcome intrusion. But their successors are legion today as they criticize government measures to care for the needy which violate precedent. But what is a roof when a life is at stake? Thank God for these lusty four friends, with their wrecked roof, and their audacity, who wanted a big thing so badly that they were not afraid to destroy a roof or a precedent. We may know what Jesus thought of them by the promptness with which He answered their need.

"Son, be of good cheer: thy sins are forgiven." Doctrinally minded bystanders were more shocked by these words than by the ripping off of the roof. "Blasphemy!" Who dared thus to talk about forgiving sins, the prerogative of God? Jesus left them no misgivings. He said here is a good point for those persons to pause and ponder who call Jesus merely a good man and a great healer and a wise teacher. For He categorically claimed the authority to forgive sins. The challenge to many was, "If Jesus is in the flesh, He Himself met it in the flesh, and proclaimed His own godship."

Quibblers, Old and New.

This was meat for the critics of Christ. Such an audacious claim was one more item to be scored up against Him, for the final reckoning that was to be settled on Calvary. At this distance, we despise these quibblers, who were callously unconcerned about the sick man healed, and intent only on denigrating the doctrine of Jesus. But their successors are noisily with us today. In contrast with the conduct of these critics we read that "when the multitudes saw it (the healing of the paralytic) they were afraid and glorified God." There is usually sound sense in the deliberate verdict of the crowd: that is why we believe in democracy. Throughout His life Jesus was better understood by the multitudes than by the religious professionals. "The common people heard Him gladly," while the scribes and Pharisees scowled and schemed.

Prof. Healy Explains How Policy in Far East Affects Whole Nation.

To encourage intelligent study of today's history-making events, The Washington Post and four great local centers of learning—American, Georgetown and Howard Universities, and the Catholic University of America—are cooperating in The Washington Post Scholarship Competition, which calls for preliminary essays by high school seniors on governmental topics, and which carries major awards of four-year tuition scholarships at the sponsoring universities.

For the benefit of the hundreds of students already enrolled in this competition, The Post is publishing a series of articles, of which the following is the fifth, contributed by professors at these four universities.

Dr. Thomas N. Healy, assistant dean of the School of Foreign Service of Georgetown University, discusses today and tomorrow the pros and cons of the following seven international problems listed among the competition's essay topics:

Our Far Eastern Policy. The Monroe Doctrine and Pan-Americanism. National Security and International Cooperation. The World Court. The Development of the League of Nations. Problems of National Defense.

There are several major points to be remembered in dealing with the seven international problems in The Washington Post essay contest. Every one of these topics has an important connection with the bearing upon the other six. All involve important political, economic and social factors. All affect our domestic problems and simultaneously the domestic and foreign problems of many other nations. They involve both principles and practices and past, present and future history.

Our Far Eastern policy involves peace or war, not only for us and Japan but Russia, China and the leading nations of Europe with their interests, because the Far East or because the Far Eastern situation affects vitally the situation in Europe itself.

Obviously our National defense is involved. This in turn involves National security and international cooperation, because armaments, security and cooperation are all interdependent. It likewise involves the League of Nations, where the Far Eastern situation has been presented on various occasions; and on some of these occasions we directly or indirectly participated.

Some authorities go so far as to say that the result of the Far Eastern situation has been a death blow to the league. Ultimately, the World Court might properly be involved, as one of its functions is to pass on alleged treaty violations. Strange though it be, the Monroe Doctrine and Pan-Americanism are involved in our Far Eastern policy, as an Asiatic Monroe Doctrine, based on the same principles as our Western Monroe Doctrine, has been involved in responsible quarters. Our policies and practices in reference to recognition and intervention in Latin America have received renewed scrutiny and approval, partly because of the questions of recognition and intervention involved in our Far Eastern policy.

Navy Building Supplies Jobs.

Fascism, Communism and democracy are likewise involved, because these factors are playing an important role in the attitude of various governments concerned in the Far Eastern situation, whose actions have a direct bearing on our own.

The future of American trade and investment in the Far East, our general standing in world trade, world investments, as well as the future of the Philippine Islands, are obviously involved. Practically every one of the angles mentioned above affect us in a domestic way, either through business factors, taxation or military preparedness. The building up of the Navy, caused partly by our Far Eastern policy, has even entered into the equation of unemployment relief and the stimulation of basic industries in the United States.

The Washington Post Scholarship Competition is open to any bona fide high school student in the fourth-year class of a public, private or parochial school within the following area: The District of Columbia; in Maryland, Anne Arundel, Calvert, Carroll, Charles, Frederick, Montgomery, Prince Georges, St. Marys and Washington Counties; in Virginia, Alexandria and Albemarle; in Arlington, Clarke, Fairfax, Fauquier, Frederick, Loudoun, Prince William, Shenandoah and Rockingham.

On Elevating Hats.

One who subscribes himself "Derby Wearer" stirred up a hornet's nest of old standing with a recent letter to The Post. He demanded to know why Washington's "hats" are called "hats," as he called us, remove their hats in elevators. It would be equally consistent, he argued, to doff the bonnet in street cars. He has noticed, moreover, that the chivalric are not chivalrous enough to show deference when the lone occupant is the elevator operator.

We must confess that our instincts and sympathies are "hats" in this respect, and that we are not ashamed of being what "Derby Wearer" calls a "hat-taker-off." With a becoming sense of modesty, we plead guilty even to removing our hat when we are alone with a female elevator operator, and we wouldn't mind taking it off in street cars if it were not for bald spots and what drafts do for them. Incidentally, those who want to be chivalrous on American street cars and buses, particularly in the rush hours, can always do it much more practically by offering a seat to a standing member of the opposite sex.

As to why "hats" remove their hats: there's no very good answer, perhaps. Most of those who observe the custom probably do it because it is one of the little amenities of consideration and courtesy which manage to persist in an age which does not deem the old-fashioned virtues highly. If the distinction between the sophisticated and the "hats" is that the former are too civilized for politeness, then the sting in the appellation is not so sharp. To uncover before women doesn't make one a gentleman. But somehow a great many gentlemen do so.

Evading Responsibility.

On Wednesday the House voted 241 to 154 to apply the "gas" rule to the income tax bill. With debate limited to 16 hours on a measure said to be "too complicated for the lay mind to entirely understand," the House has again abandoned its right to act as a deliberative body. It can not excuse its refusal in the present case by alleging that the bill is an Administration measure. Moreover, there is no public emergency great enough to justify rushing such an important piece of tax legislation through the House.

As a matter of fact, the tax bill in the form reported by the Ways and Means Committee is greatly in need of revision. In the first place, it tinkers with the income tax law, without effecting the fundamental reforms that are required to make it a reasonably democratic kind of imposition. Instead of a form of class legislation applicable to a small percentage of the people. Indeed by increasing surtax rates in the upper brackets, the measure exaggerates the existing lack of balance, increases the incentives to evasion and tends to accelerate the flight into tax-exempt securities.

The bill also carries an irrelevant tax imposed on cocoanut and sesame oils, which according to Senator Lewis "smells to high heaven." Among other undesirable provisions, mention may be made of the authority given to the Treasury to impose reprisal taxes on foreign-branch establishments of countries which discriminate against American branches. It is further provided that the credits allowed for payment of income taxes to foreign countries by American concerns shall be cut in half—an utterly illogical and burdensome proceeding. These instances are cited merely to show the need for a careful study of this important tax measure which the House is preparing to pass under the "gas" rule with only 16 hours allowed for debate.

No Time For Precipitancy.

President Roosevelt has intervened to avert a threatened controversy between the railroads and their employees. Both sides probably will welcome this wise action as heartily as the public at large, for nothing is to be gained by precipitating a struggle over wage schedules at this inopportune time. The action taken by the railway executives in giving notice of an intention to cut basic rates 15 per cent doubtless is a strategic move intended to strengthen their defenses against demands for restoration of the 10 per cent cut, effective until June 30. Maneuvering of this sort is a familiar preliminary to negotiations between organized labor and employing industries.

In this particular case, the request for a six months' truce rests upon sound arguments that neither capital nor labor can afford to disregard. The President's letter points out that the financial condition of the roads, although improving, is still impaired and that they are not yet in a position to attract private capital. Under such conditions a wage controversy would, as the President says, "have a most disturbing influence." Thus, too, there has been comparatively little change in living costs since the 10 per cent cut was agreed upon. Hence railway labor would not suffer further from a prolongation of the provisional reduction in basic pay.

In urging support of a waiting policy, the President says that prices are "unsettled" and he adds, "I am hopeful that they will in general rise to higher levels." This cautious anticipation is in sharp contrast to the exuberance which characterized earlier executive references to the outlook for rising prices and speedy attainment of the price level of 1926. It is, however, an attitude that should help to reassure both employers and employees who fear that sudden advances in prices would find them committed to agreements they might later have cause to repent.

The Federal Reserve System.

In his recent letter to Governor Black of the Federal Reserve Board President Roosevelt asserted that the gold reserve act of 1934 "interferes in no way with the credit, currency, or supervisory responsibilities of the Reserve Banks. Their powers will continue to be exercised in the interest of agriculture, commerce and industry, just as they have been for the past 20 years." The letter continues with a eulogy of the Federal Reserve System, presumably designed to end rumors that the Administration is disposed to relegate it to a position of nominal as well as actual subordination in the financial set-up.

The plain and unvarnished fact is that the Federal Reserve System of today is not the one established 20 years ago, any more than it is the system which existed a year back. The present organization has been shorn of its power to formulate an independent credit policy and can no longer regulate the flow of funds into and out of the country, as it did when the United States was on the gold standard. The gold reserve act of 1934 not only took from the system all of its gold, but in so doing definitely deprived it of future control over gold movements, although of course the power had already been lost as a result of the gold embargo and subsequent monetary manipulations. With the passage of this act, therefore, the central banking system of this country formally surrendered one of the chief privileges and duties which it had exercised prior to suspension of gold payments.

Moreover, out of the profits of devaluation, the gold reserve act of 1934 created a $2,000,000,000 stabilization fund to be managed by the Treasury. With these free resources, the Treasury is placed in a position to create such vast additions to member bank reserves as to destroy the power of the Federal Reserve Banks to check an undesired expansion of credit. The exercise of the power to exert a check upon credit activities by selling Government securities in the open market has been made exceptionally difficult by the heavy borrowing program of the Government. But the power to contract still exists, or did, until the new stabilization fund was set up.

Apart from specific changes, the mere fact that the Administration has assumed responsibility for defining our monetary policies and fixing our price goal, indicates a subordinate role for the Federal Reserve System. Such indeed, appears to be the President's conception of its proper function, as shown by the emphasis which he places upon its willingness to cooperate in every way with the Government's financing program. Cooperation, of course, is essential at all times, but there is a great difference between cooperation under conditions that permit extensive freedom of action to the central banking authorities, and cooperation under restrictions which entail virtual forfeiture of independence.

Whenever a government sets out to prescribe a form of currency management, it follows necessarily that the central banking system called upon to aid that policy is shorn of powers previously possessed. Reginald McKenna, the head of the Midland Bank, said recently that currency management—of which he heartily approves—is incompatible with complete freedom of the Bank of England. If that be true for the moderate form of currency management in operation in Great Britain, it is certainly much more true of the complicated and ambitious program of monetary control with which the United States is experimenting.

"Extravagant Economies."

Gov. Lehman of New York makes use of a phrase that may well be applied to the District budget when it is taken up by the appropriations sub-committee next week. Having frequently issued warnings against extravagant spending, he now emphasizes the folly of "extravagant economies."

The tendency toward indulgence of this sort appears to be more acute in Washington than in almost any other American city. The District is entirely free from debt. It will end the current fiscal year with a surplus, and the budget now awaiting Congressional action provides for the expenditure of nearly $5,443,000 less than the prospective revenue. At the same time various needs of the Capital City are suffering serious neglect.

"No community," says Gov. Lehman, "can disregard the responsibility which it owes itself and civilization in the education of its children." The 1935 District budget puts the schools on a subsistence basis, making almost no allowance for the constant growth in enrollment. A number of buildings and additions are urgently needed. Supplemental estimates to relieve the most acute cases of congestion in the schools and to provide for a branch library have been submitted to the Budget Bureau. But that organization, which is essentially a Federal agency, does not appear to be impressed by the extravagance of some economies it seeks to impose upon the District in order to accumulate a surplus fund.

The people of Washington have no desire to incur a municipal debt. They are proud of the fact that the finances of the District are maintained on a sound basis. Nevertheless, it is a source of widespread regret that the District is compelled to use open dumps while a newly built incinerator stands idle; that surplus funds are accumulated while many necessary improvements are delayed, and that Congress takes advantage of local reserve funds, built up through pinch-penny policies, further to reduce the Federal contribution to Washington's budget.

For this situation the Budget Bureau shares responsibility with Congress. Unless the former agency forwards to Capitol Hill the supplementary estimates prepared by the District Commissioners, the House committee will necessarily begin its work without adequate information as to the urgent requirements of the Capital City.

Still Very Obscure.

A haze of confusion still hangs over the air-mail contract controversy. Former Postmaster General Brown's public statement is a direct contradiction of several points made by Postmaster General Farley in his letter to Senator Black. Congress has taken up the issue and political charges are being hurled with characteristic recklessness in both houses. The MacCracken case, too, has tended to divert attention from the real issues which Congress must decide. Nor does the refusal of the Federal court in New York to restrain the Government from cancelling an air-mail contract change the situation. Such a decision was inevitable.

Mr. Farley charges that the air-mail contractors met with Mr. Brown "for the purpose of dividing territory and contracts among themselves" and that these meetings resulted in "the practical elimination of competitive bidding." With one possible exception, he believes that "all the present domestic air mail carriers secured contracts based on conspiracy or collusion."

The former Postmaster General, Walter F. Brown, is equally emphatic in declaring: "No suggestion of dividing air operations among the companies represented at the May 19 and June 4 meetings was ever made or contemplated and no suggestion with respect to bidding on air-mail contracts or refraining to bid on air-mail contracts was made at any time." These meetings, he contends, were held to discuss the Watres bill and to determine whether any relief could be given to passenger lines having no mail contracts. "There is absolutely no justification," says Mr. Brown, "for the charge that any of the air-mail contracts were awarded through collusion among contractors or by any other illegal practice."

Richard W. Robbins, president of the Transcontinental and Western Air, asserts that meetings similar to those of which Mr. Farley complains have been held under the latter's administration. For example, air-mail carriers were invited to the Postoffice Department for a discussion before the lower rates were put into effect last September.

It is of the utmost importance that the quinquennial of these charges and countercharges be sifted out with a minimum of partisanship. There is always grave danger that a controversy of this kind may descend to mere maneuvering for political advantage. The underlying issues are too serious to tolerate that outcome.

The most important job of Congress and the Postoffice Department is to develop a means of continuing the air-mail service on a fair and economical basis. Actual grafts deserve no consideration. But a complete assembly of the facts regarding air-mail contracts is necessary before final judgments can be rendered. And even these conclusions ought not to obscure the larger problem of evolving a new subsidy plan that will not lend itself to repetition of the present unpalatable situation.

One Against Thebes.

Under the shadow that present events cast over the League of Nations, American newspapers have barely noted, the foreign press has merely announced, the death of William Martin. Yet this Genevese journalist not only was an authority upon the League. He exercised, perhaps more than any other unofficial individual, a genuine influence upon its development.

The newspaper wherein he wrote through so many exigent years is published in a city of the third rank, according to that system which esteems towns in proportion to their population; Switzerland itself is a little country with no ambitions beyond its borders. Nevertheless, when the Journal de Geneve printed—as it did almost daily—a Martin article about the current course of the League, then the League Secretariat, housed at Geneva, or the League Council or Assembly in session there, studied, wet from the press, whatever Martin had written, and, in more instances than a few, followed his advice.

Martin seldom trusted his marvelous memory for the devastating minutiae of modern history. Like the late Talcott Williams, his articles were documented from an overwhelming library of cross-indexed and double-indexed news-clippings. He could instantly verify his every inference, support his every accusation where the very statesmen most involved had long ago forgotten.

For the newspaper-reading public, Martin, neither myopic nor visionary, demonstrated what one fearless writer can accomplish from a key-position. For the members of his profession, he stood high among the symbols of the revival of personality, the suppression of personalities, in journalism.

Letters to the Editor

Answering Mr. Miller.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Kelly Miller's views expressed in his letter entitled "The Naive Nazis," and published in your valuable paper, demand serious correction. His observations on the Nazi Nordic myths are useful and interesting, but his comparison of the Nazi slogan, "Des Vaterland Uber Alles," with the spiritual background of the Hebrew and Christian philosophy, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," indicates a lack of understanding of the "blessing" as well as erroneous discernment of the Hebrew concept of "a chosen people."

Let us enlighten our friend on the points he has chosen to raise. The Hebrew religion has not changed. The law initiated on Mount Sinai still holds good, and as the ages go by it more and more attracts the attention of mankind. It has not outlived its usefulness. It never will. It is the divine Jesus who in his immortal Sermon on the Mount proclaimed to a pagan world: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets: I am come to fulfill, to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."

In view of the fact that the Hebrew genius conceived the monotheistic thought and because the Hebrews were determined to accept the glorious position of a vigorous minority and did withstand the onslaughts of the barbarians for many centuries in propagating and widely diffusing the God-idea, in the course of time, the doctrine of the Hebrews being "a chosen people" evolved. A chosen people? For what purpose? To carry the brunt of civilization against savagery. It was no easy or enviable task. How well the narrow-minded materialist might have wished that some other racial group had governed the world, for which it paid both in treasure and blood.

Mr. Miller asserts that the Nazis persecute them just as the latter persecuted the Gentiles. We challenge him to adduce even a scintilla of evidence of his unadvised allegation, unless he has in mind the ancient Hebrew wars against the worshippers of Moloch, to whom they sacrificed innocent children and babes by roasting them alive. This God Moloch certainly found, in this twentieth century, its counterpart in the Nazi god of Wotan of the Forest.

Mr. Miller's analogy between the Hebrew persecution of Gentiles with that of the destruction wrought by the Nazis is as logical and fair as if he compared the humanitarian policies of President Roosevelt with Hitler's tyrannical dictatorship and race hatred.

Mr. Miller, we are satisfied, does not understand the sacred writings of the Old Testament. Here is a formula which may, perhaps, lead him to a proper approach of what he calls the Hebrew Bible, as if the New Testament were separable and could be divorced from the Old. Let him realize that the Bible is a mirror of life. Once this concept has become meaningful to him, his intellect will be cleared of its debris and his vision will become serene and undimmed.

Discussing Rabies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My attention has been called to an article in your issue of January 27, under the caption "Mad Kiss Danger Passes," in which it is said: "Mrs. C. E. Ross, who gave her husband one last kiss as he lay dying of rabies, today was apparently out of danger of contracting the disease."

The greatest authorities tell us that rabies is a disease of extremely rare occurrence, but we are constantly having rabies scares, which are of no benefit to anyone and are of very real danger to timid, nervous people.

The late Dr. W. O. Stillman, distinguished president of the American Humane Association, wrote and published in the National Humane Review an editorial entitled "Rabies Scars as a Fine Art," in which he said:

"The editor of this magazine, who has been the active head of an aggressive campaign against rabies for more than 25 years, and for a longer period a practicing physician, has come to the definite conclusion that the rabies scares are mostly humbugs. He has never seen a case of the disease, although familiar for more than 25 years with municipal dog kennel work handling thousands of dogs."

Dr. Charles W. Dulles, late lecturer on history of medicine, University of Pennsylvania, 1893-1908, consulting surgeon to Rush Hospital, manager of University Hospital, who was undoubtedly the greatest authority on hydrophobia in this country, if not in the world, made a study of hydrophobia for more than 30 years. In an address delivered in Washington, in 1913, Dr. Dulles said:

"I might cite my own experience in the treatment of persons bitten by dogs supposed to be mad, which has furnished me a single case of the developed disease in 30 years. I have probably seen more cases of so-called hydrophobia than any other medical man. . . ."

Dr. Dulles also said: "In France, which is full of Pasteur Institutes, there are supposed to be annually thousands of cases with the infection of hydrophobia, while in Great Britain, where there is no Pasteur Institute, the disease does not occur. Another curious thing is that in Constantinople, where dogs have run wild for centuries in the streets, there was so little hydrophobia that it was long denied that it existed there at all; but since a Pasteur Institute has been established in the city, cases have been quite frequent, according to the Pasteur people."

According to authoritative statistics published in the "Annals of the Pasteur Institute" and other official publications, 2,200 persons have died of hydrophobia after receiving the Pasteur treatment, some of them undoubtedly in consequence of such treatment, as in certain cases it has been proved that the dogs which had bitten the patients were not mad.

In the "Annals de L'Institut Pasteur" for 1909, page 269, Dr. Masson gave an account of the "accidents" accompanying the treatment, such as paralysis, heart failure, sudden brain congestion resulting in convulsions, attacks of fever, rashes, etc.

In the Final Report of the Royal Commission on Vivisection, page 117, Dr. George Wilson, LL.D. (Edinburgh), said: "I venture to submit that the whole Pasteurian theory, and the treatment based upon it, are fraught with error from beginning to end."

Albert Payson Terhune, the well-known authority on dogs, is reported in The Humane Quarterly, Washington, May, 1933, as follows: "Of all the absurd and ill-founded legends about dogs, the mad dog scares is the worst. Not one supposedly mad dog in a thousand really has the hydrophobia. Moreover, a rabid dog is desperately sick—too sick and dazed to go out of its way to attack any one. . . . If a dog refuses to drink water, there is just one genuine cause, namely, that it is not thirsty."

Federal Aid for Schools.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One notes with grave concern the opposition which is arising against the movement to give Federal aid to our public schools during this emergency. It is hard to account for this opposition unless it comes from those who do not believe in public education under any circumstances and would like to see all public schools closed.

It must be conceded that our Federal Government is quite as much the beneficiary of public education as are the State governments, because citizens of our several States are also citizens of the United States. It follows, therefore, that if the State governments are unable to keep the public schools open, the Federal Government should see that they are kept open.

The argument that the States should bear the whole expense of public education is without sense or force at the present time. During the depression the States have become financially unable to keep the public schools open. The Federal Government, which has an interest in these schools equal to the interest of the States, should now come to the aid of the States and see that these schools are not closed on account of the depression.

As Others See It

Dinner at Twenty.

The Astronomer Royal of England favors a change in the civil reckoning of time to the 24-hour day which has long been used by astronomers and the question is now up in Parliament. The Astronomer Royal believes that "there is a widespread demand for the reform" and urges its adoption especially for the general postoffice and for railway timetables. He argues that "there are no signs that the public has any desire for the change." The postoffice authorities refrain from committing themselves, preferring to abide by the views of the country as a whole.

Formerly the astronomers started the 24-hour day at noon; then the advantages of the 24-hour system were pointed out in some of the countries of Europe, but the reckoning was from midnight onward. The first hour after midnight was the zero hour—0, then 1 o'clock and so on up to 24 o'clock, which was midnight again. The almanac-makers adopted the 24-hour system, and since 1921 Whitaker's Almanack has used it regularly. With the astronomers persisting in starting the day at noon and confusion resulted, and in 1925 an international agreement was concluded to begin the day at midnight.

The 24-hour clock is a convenience in some respects—it does away with the designations "A. M." and "P. M." It lessens the chance of mistakes in some professions where men are on duty all round the clock, professions in which mistakes may lead to serious consequences; it would do away with the necessity of printing timetables in light and heavy-faced numerals to indicate the hours before and after noon. Whether these manifest arguments in favor of the new clock face would overcome the general deep-rooted objection to the traditional way of reckoning is a question difficult to answer with any positiveness. It seems easier to say "11 o'clock" than "23 o'clock," even though "eleven" and "twenty-three" have the same number of syllables.

We like to think of dinner at 8 o'clock rather than at 20. Perhaps we are just prejudiced, "so in our way," as many were in 1883, when Standard Time was introduced, as many are today when Daylight Saving yanks them out of bed while they are still deep in their beauty sleep.

Along the Potomac

With
Carlisle Barger

At last I am beginning to understand why the White House snapped at Col. Lindbergh the other day. I hadn't been able to do so before.

It was so unlike the present Administration's mood, the first time, in fact, that anything resembling a scowl had appeared on its face. I imagine, too, that a lot of people had wondered about it.

Good nature and geniality have characterized this Administration. Until the Lindbergh telegram not a thing so far as I knew, had soured it in the slightest. Day laughter has resounded within the corridors during what appeared to be many of its life's darkest moments. The secretariat and correspondents regularly assigned to the White House have gained quite a reputation for singing out for singing plaintive songs either, but melodies full of fun and of cheer.

I would have fully expected the Lindbergh telegram to be greeted by uproarious guffaws and hah hahs and perhaps a jutting expression of "fine" from Mr. Roosevelt himself. Such receptions have been accorded the boldest tactics of Huey Long. The White House was one safe place the Senator could go, for that matter. Regardless of how he got on the nerves of others, at the White House they were never so nettled or distraught as not to be able to laugh heartily at him.

Yet along comes the Colonel, a most modest-appearing young man, and he gets rebuked and how! It reminded me of the fellow at the party whom everybody could kid, who took no offense at any of the witticisms at his expense until finally some fellow over in the corner who had not opened his mouth attempted to join in, whereupon the jovial good fellow turned sharply on him.

In this case, though, I couldn't believe it was the Colonel's personality that rubbed the White House the wrong way. After all, the Colonel was a right good personality. He is not so popular with newspapermen because he splashed mud on them, and because they could never square his pose of modesty with the schemes of his publicity men. But he is popular with everybody else.

In searching around for explanation of the White House's attitude in this instance, I finally concluded that there must be some past incident in its life that accounted for it, something in infancy perhaps, or maybe an adolescence even in early maturity. I went through book after book on psychoanalysis. I even tried to find out what dreams, if any, the White House has.

I had almost given it up and concluded that it would have to remain one of life's unsolved mysteries when presto, it came like a flash. Mr. Roosevelt himself was once rebuked by the White House!

Yes sir, it was at the time he was quietly campaigning for Democratic nomination and a reputation for trying to negotiate a treaty with Canada on the St. Lawrence waterways project. At that time it looked as though waterpower was to be one of the principal issues of the impending campaign. Mr. Roosevelt at Albany had surrounded himself with an array of liberals on the subject in an effort to attract the Republican Progressives to him.

He wanted to get into the St. Lawrence treaty picture so he wrote Mr. Hoover asking that he be permitted to have a reputation for the negotiations. And if I remember rightly, he made the letter public in Albany. Mr. Hoover would likely not have mentioned the request. My recollection is that he was ignoring it. When Mr. Roosevelt made his letter public though, Mr. Hoover turned it over to Under-Secretary of State Castle, at the time acting secretary. He replied, beginning his letter with:

"Dear Frank:"

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Two Famous Antagonists.

In the middle of the nineteenth century, when a feeling between Catholics and Protestants was far more bitter than it is now, the Protestant clergyman Charles Kingsley and the great Catholic priest, John Henry Newman, engaged in a public joint debate with pen and ink, that attracted the attention of the whole English-speaking world.

But what is most interesting to me is this. These two distinguished men were at that time famous first for their theological doctrines, and secondly for their skill as masters of good literary prose.

But they will both be remembered longest for their short poems, which I suppose seemed to them almost incidental and unimportant compared with the stature that engaged all their time and strength.

When Newman was a young man, becalmed on a fruit boat, in the Mediterranean Sea, he wrote a few stanzas apparently without much effort. But this little poem is probably the greatest hymn in the English language "Lead Kindly Light." It is the greatest hymn because while it expressed the most intense religious feeling, it is like the Lord's Prayer in that it can be spoken or sung by any person of any faith who looks up.

Charles Kingsley wrote two ballads of the sea: "The Three Fishers" and "The Sands of Dee." They are both perfect in their way, full of emotion and having the very surge of the sea in their rhythm.

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

Paying the Piper.

Rather behind the heyday of sermonizing on the Great War comes R. C. Hutchinson's "The Unforgotten Prisoner" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.75). The army of the "All Quiet" school has marched past. But this member of the rear guard finds enough to do in mopping up.

Post-war England trying to find its feet again, post-war Germany desperate and going to pieces—that is the background. Charles Sargent thinks he has married the German governess in his father's stately British house, finds that the ceremony was false, is forced to let her go back to Germany. There, married to an army officer, she bears Charles a son named Klaus. Years later, Charles' brother finds Klaus and brings him back to England, to a long slow effort at understanding. There was the war between them by that time.

So long a novel as this has room to dwell on many scenes, many people. The German city of Birne-wald, with its minor brutalities of street patrols and calloused petty officials swallowed up in the great brutality of starvation and dislocation, stands out as the picture of the book. The strenuous "will to believe" of the English, going through tea and cricket as if nothing had happened, is only less moving. For all Hutchinson's immersion in the "strong loyalist" stream of writing, he has much to tell here which can not be marred by sounding generalities. The aftermath of war, slower and more tortuous than battle, exacts its price, and "The Unforgotten Prisoner" shows this unforgetfully.

Flight of the Century.

Don Howard worked his way up in the air transport company, invented a "pitch prop" device for changing the angle of a propeller's blades in mid-air which gave his plane a cruising speed of 400 miles an hour, did a round-trip flight of the Atlantic and won his girl.

"Big Flight" (Atlantic Monthly Press—Little Brown, $2.) is a grown-up "Rover Boys in the Air." Its authors, Francis and Katherine Drake are aviation enthusiasts and have flown around South America. Into their book they have packed the terse lingo of air-mail pilots, the routine of a flying field, death and disaster when there's a "low ceiling" over the mountains, a crafty villain, love interest, and a rousing climax that ought to put you on the edge of your chair. It's grand entertainment, with the news-of-the-day advantage of showing you at close hand what flying the mail means to the pilots and dispatchers concerned.

Miss Baum in Hollywood.

Vicki Baum went out to Hollywood to have a hand in the filming of "Grand Hotel," and stayed to take notes. In "Falling Star" (Doubleday Doran, $2.) she has cooked them all up together and served them steaming and sweet as a pudding.

Donka Moreescu (one guess as to her nationality) had been in bright lights once in the silent movies. Now she was trying to do it again in the talkies. If a long day's work could accomplish that. But between having her cake (ambition for stardom) and eating it too (her conquest of Oliver Dent—great screen lover), she forfeited both. Oliver, dying of a stomach trouble along with a broken heart, called out her name at the last. The success of her film was but lukewarm.

Very few items of Hollywood seasoning escaped Miss Baum, but her sometimes incongruous flavor melts into the rich, German sentimentalism. Read it some night when you feel like going to the movies—it will beguile you as pleasantly. Or perhaps you read it last summer in the Cosmopolitan.

"The Good Earth" in New Dress.

The Modern Library has just issued Pearl Buck's "The Good Earth" ($0.90), with a highly interesting foreword taken from Mrs. Buck's reply to a Chinese critic. He had accused her, so to speak, of leaving out the "official button"—a reference to a painting made by a Western artist of a mandarin, in which the button on the mandarin's cap was left out because it was behind his head. The conclusion of Mrs. Buck's reply is worth quoting: "I have no sense of mission or of doing any service. I write because it is my nature so to do, and I can write only what I know, and I know nothing but China, having always lived there. I have few friends of my own race, almost none intimate, and so I write about the people I do know. They are the people in China I love best to live among, the everyday people, who care nothing for official buttons."

If you haven't read "The Good Earth," this edition is an excellent means. Otherwise, you will remain in the sorry plight of your grandfather who missed "Quo Vadis"—the only other American best-seller as popular as Mrs. Buck's splendid story.

FRANCES PERKINS, Secretary of Labor. She selected the title "Madam Secretary" to end a knotty problem arising from the fact that she is the first woman Cabinet member, that, as a feminist, she is "Miss Perkins," and that she is also Mrs. Paul Wilson. Born in Boston, educated at Mount Holyoke and University of Pennsylvania. She was on one New York State commission after another. Sociologist, welfare worker, advanced liberal, interested in everything from the safety of skyscraper window cleaners to silicosis, i. e., the same as chalcosis. She was the nemesis of her Cabinet predecessor, Jim Davis, because she kept riddling his cheery unemployment statistics. She made the South pretty mad by a speech on the big market for shoes, but Dixie forgave her when she went to Atlanta and admitted that the South wasn't barefooted. On a hot August day, she served the press ginger ale—very nice. Her famous triangular hats haven't started exactly a craze for them. Hard worker, keen, considered the smartest Cabinet member.

Morgenthau Shifts Robert In Shake-up for 'Efficiency'

Administration is protecting H. L. Doherty, builder of Cities Service Co., which Mr. McFadden charged was one of the "biggest tax evaders" in the country. Mr. Doherty organized the recent National celebration of President Roosevelt's birthday. Mr. McFadden said Mr. Doherty was one of the largest Democratic campaign fund contributors.

McFadden said he had been informed that Mr. Doherty's income tax matters were being handled by Arthur F. Mullin, Democratic national committeeman. He also said one of the key men in the Treasury's tax division was a friend of Representative McClintic (Democrat), Oklahoma, pointed out that President Roosevelt recently protested against party officials handling legal business before Government departments.

"But there is a vast difference between the Bureau of Internal Revenue in this Administration," McFadden retorted. "The men in control of the Bureau of Internal Revenue are members of the same kind that was in there during the last Administration."

He asserted certain lawyers who practice before the income tax division are able to get facts and records not available to others.

Helvering Appears Safe. Recently Guy Helvering, of Kansas, commissioner of internal revenue, began a drive to collect $700,000 in back taxes. It is understood that although Mr. Helvering was appointed under the Woodin regime, the present Secretary is entirely satisfied with his work. He is one of a few holdover officials of the pre-Morgenthau period whose head appears to be safe.

Changes made since Mr. Morgenthau took charge of the Treasury upon his appointment as Undersecretary November 17, 1933, and his elevation to the Secretaryship on January 1, 1934, include these: Dean Acheson resigned as Undersecretary to make way for Mr. Morgenthau, and returned to his Washington law firm. Thomas Hewes resigned as assistant secretary after Mr. Morgenthau stripped him of control over Customs, Coast Guard, and other important activities. He was given control over two minor activities, the Bureau of Engraving and the Mint. These two were turned over to Assistant Secretary Robert Woodin.

E. Barrett Prettymann resigned as counsel for the Bureau of Internal Revenue, a vital post so far as huge tax assessments are concerned, to make way for Robert H. Jackson, up-State New York lawyer, and not related to the Robert Jackson who recently resigned as Secretary of the Democratic National committee because of his law practice here. Prettymann is resuming the practice of law here, but his forced resignation is to be debated in the Senate shortly.

Walter J. Cummings resigned as executive assistant to the Secretary. Earle Baillie, a Morgenthau appointee, resigned as adviser because of Congressional opposition. Dr. C. M. W. Sprague resigned as financial adviser because of general disagreement with the Administration monetary policy.

O'Connor in "Spot."

2 Drs. Morgan, TVA Idealists, Flout Politics

Lillenthal, Third Member of Triumvirate, Is Power Expert.

Editor's note: There follows the fifth dispatch in a series describing the kind of "practical idealism" in vogue in the Tennessee Valley development program.

(Copyright, 1934, by the United Press.)

Knoxville, Tenn., Feb. 16.—The two Doctors Morgan and young David E. Lillenthal, who hold the future fate of the South in their hands, run the Tennessee valley development program without heed to politics or Governmental bureaucracy.

They do their job without bickering or red tape.

Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, one-time head of Antioch College in Ohio, is chief. He is a tall, spare man with a quick smile and an acknowledged flair for civil engineering. Exactly 77 food and water control projects throughout the country stand as monuments to his ability. The Tennessee river program, one of the greatest single engineering tasks ever undertaken in the United States, will be the seventy-eighth.

Modest and Enthusiastic.

He is modest about it, yet enthusiastic, and as interested in the weaving of woolen and the firing of pottery by electricity as he is in the erecting of $34,000,000 dams.

Whatever other fame he achieves, he will be remembered in official Washington as the man for whom Diogenes searched. When Dr. Morgan was appointed head of the TVA he filed with President Roosevelt a list of all his possessions, his car and his real estate. When he has finished the job he intends to file another similar list.

He will not tolerate graft. There has been no hint of it in any of the multimillion dollar deals he has engineered since his appointment less than a year ago.

Second in command is Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan, president of the University of Tennessee, practical farmer and internationally known authority on bugs. His life specialty has been entomology.

Dr. Harcourt A. Morgan specializes on the farming and fertilizing aspects of the program. He is a short, forceful man, 66 years old, full of energy and sound knowledge of agriculture. He knows farmers up and down the valley by first name. His prestige is such that he can tell them how to change their planting methods without offending them. That is a real achievement.

No Nitrates at Shoals.

He is busy now experimenting with Muscle Shoals as a potash producer. Nitrates, for which Muscle Shoals originally was built, will not be produced there. Dr. Morgan says the farmer can manufacture his own nitrates more efficiently by merely plowing under a crop of beans or other legumes now and again.

Third member of the triumvirate is 33-year-old David E. Lillenthal, who worked so hard at his job selling Federal power and arranging legal details of T. V. A.'s multitudinous transactions, that his physician forced him to take a rest. He is in Florida now, but his associates said they were certain that power rates, and not sandy beaches, were uppermost in his mind.

Lillenthal achieved his first fame by reorganizing the Wisconsin Public Service Commission and forcing power and telephone companies in that State to reduce rates. In so doing, he gained full knowledge of the inner workings of power companies, their holding companies and their sometimes mysterious financial arrangements.

He is largely responsible for recent contracts by which the South's private power companies will buy Federally manufactured electricity, with a consequent saving to the consumer.

The chieftains of the TVA hold to a man that the program will succeed in most of its details. They are not that any aspects which tend to fail will be dropped like so many hot coals.

Success of the TVA, such as they predict, inevitably would affect the whole Nation, as well as remold Southern life in all its aspects.

Tomorrow: The future of the Tennessee Valley—and of the Nation—as seen through the rosy glasses of the TVA.

Firms Divided, Mail Contracts, Black Asserts

Replies to Brown, Insisting Evidence Shows Collusion.

tion of the emergency air mail bill, which is expected to be reported out today. Second Assistant Postmaster General Harlan Branch testified in addition to other witnesses, who went into details of the charges against the air line contractors.

While Black was making his spirited defense of the Administration's action, Representative Hamilton Fish, Jr. (Republican), New York, issued just as spirited an attack on Postmaster General Farley, calling upon him to resign either his Post Office Department job or the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee.

Hits "Ill-Advised" Action.

"The drastic and ill-advised action of Postmaster General Farley in cancelling air-mail contracts made under a Republican administration without a hearing, on grounds of favoritism and unproven fraud, and bringing ruin to a great and growing industry together with his holding high political and party office, require his resignation from one or the other immediately," Fish said.

"It is the purpose of the Postmaster General to wreck American aviation, he is going about it in the right way. It is a shame that the air-mail contracts are being made a political football."

On the other hand, Black predicted: "This cancellation will not retard aviation's orderly progress. It will accelerate it. It will not close the airports. It will not stop the carriage of mail."

A total of $98,112,016 was paid for agreements into the pockets of favored bankers, brokers or stock manipulators, politicians and lobbyists," continued Black. "It was not intended that Government money should be used to enrich favored individuals by exorbitant and unearned salaries, bonuses and dividends."

Raps Riches for a Few.

"It was never intended by patriotic citizens that this Governmental aid should be diverted by collusive agreements into the pockets of favored bankers, brokers or stock manipulators, politicians and lobbyists," continued Black. "It was not intended that Government money should be used to enrich favored individuals by exorbitant and unearned salaries, bonuses and dividends."

With a final thrust at large holding companies and trusts that control not only operating lines but airplane manufacturing companies and supply concerns, Black said:

"With this kind of holding companies to sell their own products, at their own price, to their own subsidiaries, associates, and affiliates, combined with constant political activities and power, the taxpayers' money has been sucked by an irresistible force, into the pockets of profiteers and Governmental favorites."

Four Controlling Companies.

Four parent holding companies, he said, controlled 25 out of the 27 contracts existing before the cancellation. They were: Aviation Corporation, with 13 contracts; United Aircraft and Transport Corporation, 5 contracts; North American Aviation Co., 5 contracts; and Northwest Airways, 1 contract. The Aviation Corporation, according to the Senator, owns 22 1/2 per cent of the stock of Northwest Airways.

Continuing his recital of what happened at the 1933 conference, in which representatives of these four companies participated, Black charged:

"Pioneer operators were either forced to sell out to the favored companies, under the plan outlined, or they were squeezed out of existence by the subsidized competition of the favored company receiving the mail contract."

THE ELMER TWITCHELL BILL FOR STOCK MARKET REFORM.

The term customer hereinafter used shall mean any man with a worried look, one button off his vest and a pack of matches but no cigarettes.

The term broker hereinafter used shall mean any man who looks overly exasperated and keeps muttering something about "those Democrats."

The term securities hereinafter used shall mean securities.

Be it enacted by the Congress of the United States, that:

1—All whispering in brokerage offices, or within twenty-five (25) feet of same during market hours shall be prohibited.

2—All huddling of brokerage office officials with an impressive man who looks as if he might know something shall be illegal. It upsets the regular customers.

4—The employment of boys, hal- wits, madmen, mental delinquents and congenial crap shooters as customers' men shall be illegal.

5—Board rooms shall be optional, but the use of chalk is hereby declared unconstitutional. If there had been no chalk in the country from 1924 to 1934 there would have been no bull market.

11—No chart shall be drawn, sketched, painted or otherwise portrayed except by Federal permission, and the practice of exhibiting a chart upside down to prove a market trend shall be punishable by six (6) months in the bond market.

12—The expression, "I'm letting you in on the ground floor," shall be punishable by a fine of $100,000 and twenty-five (25) years in gaol.

John Brophy, the well-known pro at the Bayshore course at Miami Beach, has invented a club handle which makes it impossible for a player to take a wrong grip and slice a golf ball. The only trouble with a thing of this sort is that it limits a player to the right fairway.

House Charges Speed Lorton Graft Inquiry

Sanitation at District Reformatory Also Due for Scrutiny.

Barnard had said that Shoemaker's information was obtained from Edward Bedell, a former Lorton prisoner, and denied that he had communicated with Tawse.

Shoemaker said he had confided in Hazen last week that he intended to make the expose and that the commissioner had pledged his cooperation to the extent of sending a police detail to Lorton to seize all records as soon as the charges were made on the House floor.

The Minnesota former convict appeared confident that the rules committee would report favorably his resolution calling for a general investigation of Lorton and Federal penitentiaries by a special committee with a $50,000 expense account.

Other members of Congress showed little concern in the controversy and welfare executives expressed confidence that the reformatory officials would be cleared of Shoemaker's charges.

The District inquiry will be launched Monday at a meeting of the penal committee of the Board of Public Welfare, composed of Michael Doyle, chairman; W. W. Millan, Frederick W. McReynolds, John Joy Edson and Mrs. Charles Goldsmith.

Bedell May Be Called. There were reports that Bedell might be summoned from New Jersey in connection with the investigation, but members of the committee said they have not mapped their course of action.

George S. Wilson, welfare director, said the investigation was decided upon prior to Shoemaker's attack in the House and was based on information furnished by a former prisoner. However, he said, the inquiry would be made broad enough to include Shoemaker's allegations. He said the Minnesota Representative might be invited to testify before the committee.

Capt. Barnard, whose term of office was extended by Executive order two years ago because he was deemed such a valuable penal superintendent, said he welcomed the investigation.

Barnard Nationally Known. Capt. Barnard achieved National reputation for introduction of the honor system at Lorton and because the institution was not surrounded by walls. Now, however, a weed group of buildings is being built to house the more recalcitrant prisoners.

It was pointed out by welfare officials yesterday that Shoemaker's reference to a shortage in the prisoners' canteen fund

Joe Palooka Steps From Post's Pages to Keith Screen—"Bombay Mail," Rialto

Comedy of the Prize Ring Has 'A Solid Punch'

Durante and Lupe Velez in Stellar Roles; Eddie Lowe, Detective.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition. "PALOOKA," United Artists production of a story based on the Joe Palooka comic strip, adapted to the screen by Jack J. Tarr, Gertrude Purcell and Arthur Kober, with additional dialogue by Ben Ryan and Murray Roth, featuring Jimmy Durante, Lupe Velez, Eddie Lowe, Stuart Erwin, Marjorie Rambeau, William Cagney, Mary Carlisle, Robert Armstrong and Thelma Todd. Directed by Benjamin Stoloff. Previous Tuesday night, February 6.

By Nelson B. Bell. This mildly lunatic translation of Mr. Ham Fisher's keenly satirical comic cartoons from the pages of this widely read family journal to the temporarily insane silver sheet of RKO-Keith's should not be looked upon as "just another prize fight picture."

While "Palooka" concerns itself in some measure with the ragged and bawdy of the prize ring, it is primarily an uproarious comedy of double-crossing managers, over-stuffed pups, easy-money gamblers, burlesque troupers, night club habitués, framed fights, counterfeit champions, dumb doras and punch-drunk hangers-on around the fringes of the backlot.

The dialogue and action are gaily and to the point, and the pace and sluggish mental processes of a lot of substratum nitwits, whose adventures in the big city are many and whose reactions are as intensely ridiculous as they are fundamentally true to type.

Two Generations.

While the story makes no pretense toward encompassing the complete saga of a long line of leather-pushers, it does revert sufficiently to pick up the early careers of Joe Palooka's parents—his father a ring champion with a nomad's instinct for travel and a connoisseur's eye for the blond perfection of every other woman in the world but his wife.

Thus it comes about that Mayme Palooka, former champion of the smoker circuits, finds herself operating a small truck and dairy farm with the aid of her son, Joe, now grown into his late teens, while Pa Palooka sells the seven seas, making merry, as the saying goes, in every port.

On the road one day, Joe Palooka encounters a belligerent and bulky individual engaged in the one-sided project of knocking his smaller traveling companion apart. This too much for Mr. Palooka's sense of justice and fair play, so he picks one up from his ankles and knocks the aggressor into a new design for pretzels. It seems he has hung one on the button of the champion of the world in an eminently successful effort to rescue the champion band manager from an annihilation that held out every promise of being quick and sure. From this preliminary flash of action is formed the partnership from which many bizarre incidents, situations, episodes and dilemmas are born.

Off for the Big Dough.

Knobby Walsh, the manager, induces his new prospect to accompany him to the city and get in the big dough. This he does in a succession of richly humorous developments that lead to the logical introduction of the night club sequences, the fights at Madison Square Garden, the "girl trouble" and the eventual return to the placid precincts of the Palooka egg ranch in the country.

The chief merit of the picture lies in the perfection with which its principal players have been selected. Jimmy Durante has one of his most explosive roles in "Knobby," the child of expediency, and Stuart Erwin is the one ne plus ultra choice for the part of the slightly daffy Joe Palooka. Marjorie Rambeau, the peroxide mama from burlesque; Lupe Velez, the flaming firebrand of the floorshows; Mary Carlisle, the smalltown gal in love with Joe; Robert Armstrong, as the perigrinating pug who gets back home just in time to train his son for a swell shellacking; and Bill Cagney, Jimmy's little brother who is bigger than Jimmy, the champion boxer-fighter Joe dethrones in a moment of accidental supremacy, are all conspicuous in "Palooka's" hilarious disclosures, each in a spot that he could not have bettered had he fashioned it himself.

There is no elegance, ethical worth or spiritual uplift in "Palooka," let it be definitely understood. It is a rough, tough, brazen and extremely amusing lowbrow comedy, with Senorita Velez wigging some torrid songs, Mr. Schnozzle Durante singing his "un-finished symphony" in a department store window, and Miss Rambeau soaking the blonde Miss Thelma Todd in the nose, all in the name of good, clean—well, clean enough—fun.

If a raucous, roaring and rowdy laugh is what you have been seeking here it is—but nothing to take home to the kiddies! A new issue of the Pathe News, a comedy, "Hold Your Temper," and a Walt Disney "Silly Symphony" bearing the title of "The China Shop," augment a feature that may be guaranteed to afford enormous fun for those who are not too faint-hearted and finicky about their film taste.

Loew's Palace Theater later yesterday announced the second all-Walt Disney program of Mickey Mouse and Silly Symphony subjects for the selection of juvenile audiences, on Saturday morning, February 24, one week from tomorrow. Admission to all youngsters and adults, will be 25 cents. Doors will be thrown open to the public at 9 o'clock, with the performance actually getting under way at 2:30. On the occasion of the first program of this nature, the Palace was so overcrowded that it was necessary to open the Columbia Theater, a block down the street, to accommodate the overflow. Ample provision, it is said, will be made this time to seat comfortably all who attend.

A Queen Affirms Her Love for a Spanish Envoy

Here is depicted only one of many poignant scenes in "Queen Christina," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production in which Greta Garbo returns to the screen at Loew's Palace Theater today after an absence of many months. It is upon this great love that the crux of the tragic story rests.

Miss Doyle Drops a Line.

In striking contrast to the note of discouragement that characterized her last letter, while still being "pushed around" the Charles R. Rogers studios in Hollywood, comes a gay note from Maxine Doyle, former mistress of ceremonies at the Earle and now a contract player with Warner Bros., scribbled in pencil on perforated paper evidently torn from a notebook, in the rush of a lunch hour at the Warner studios in Burbank last Monday.

"I've taken more pictures than they can use in five years... have had to go to a gym every day for two hours to lose 10 pounds... I've been doing quite a few bits in pictures, so watch for me... they've been grooming me for better things, so they say."

"Started rehearsals last Friday for my first part. It's in 'The Key,' and I do two songs and a dance, and a cute part... not big, but nice... one of the numbers is beautiful and is the theme song of the picture... it well I am to have a nice big role in a new picture just coming up."

"This is really a scribbly note, but I'm writing at lunch time because I'll be pretty busy with rehearsals and fittings this afternoon. Joe Brown, Cagney, Bette Davis, Dick Powell and Donnie Wood send their best."

Such, in part, are the ambitious and talented Miss Doyle's disclosures. At last she seems to be going places and doing things in pictures, the dream of every girl's heart, with the flash of the lights in her eyes and the scent of grease paint in her nostrils. And it seems to me, that's pretty good progress since last Sept. 1.

Frank Lloyd, whose preeminence as a director was established 'way back yonder in the silent days when he made "The Sea Hawk," with Milton Sills starred, takes the trouble to be grateful. A note dated February 7, in Los Angeles, reads as follows:

"Dear Mr. Bell—Thank you for your selection of 'Cavalcade' as one of the ten best pictures of the year. I want to assure you that all those who were concerned in the making of this production join me in expressing their gratitude. Sincerely, (Signed) FRANK LLOYD."

Rialto

"BOMBAY MAIL," Universal picture, starring Edmund Lowe, with Onslow Stevens, Shirley Grey, Hedda Hopper, Ferdinand Gottschalk, John Wray, Georges Renavent, Jameson Thomas and Walter Armitage. Directed by Edwin L. Marin. Reviewed Thursday afternoon by W. A. Whitney.

The geographical and ethnological enigma that is India forms as nearly the perfect setting for a mystery drama as any that might be fabricated out of whole cloth for the occasion. And "Bombay Mail" lives up to the possibilities engendered by "India" and "mystery."

A train drama—but not just another of a series—transpiring en route from Calcutta to Bombay, with a collection of passengers from which anything might emerge, is this picture, which gives Edmund Lowe the opportunity to act as Inspector Dyke, C. I. D., and to solve the murder of Sir Anthony Daniels, Governor of Bengal, and of the Maharajah of Zungore.

Complications of international, as well as personal, import pile one upon another until one wonders if the Calcutta-Bombay trip is not much too short for the complete unraveling of the principal story. Besides the facts that Sir Anthony dies from cyanide poisoning and his Highness is shot in the back, and those bearing upon the passively important ruby mines, little is offered the inspector on which to work.

No Fair Telling!

Indeed, so completely hidden are the pivotal details that it is not without astonishment that, on eliminating the suspects, one by one, Mr. Lowe finally points his finger at... Hold on there, you can't say that! But perhaps you get the idea. Edmund Lowe is a remarkably smooth detective, not entirely without his traditional weakness. Yet the ladies do not particularly bother him this time, and he, accordingly, leaves the pretty Shirley Grey for Onslow Stevens, one of the more consistently assured—but, of course, wrongly—members of the exotic conglomeration of characters.

Although soon erased from the pictures as a living person, Ferdinand Gottschalk, as Sir Anthony, has time to depict a stolid English envoy. Longer on the scene, Walter Armitage does a great job upholding the native tradition of Oriental magnificence and regal splendor as the Maharajah.

Tabloid Musical.

Hedda Hopper, as Lady Daniels; Brandon Hurst, as the Ghandigar Pandit Chundra; Georges Renavent, as the great French toxicologist, traveling a la Dr. Dittmars, and John Davidson, as the insidious Xavier, contribute very fine impersonations in the more essential supporting roles.

As the chief attraction among the supplementary subjects, the Rialto presents as nearly an eight-act vaudeville show as is possible upon the screen. "Broadway Varieties" is just that, with short, interesting and diverting acts by Adelaide Hall, the Masconi Brothers and Dorothy Barnauld; Slim Timblin and Warren Boyd; Murray Wood, Three Girl Friends and others.

Other auxiliary attractions include an issue of the cinema version of "The Washington Post" features, John Hix's "Strange As It Seems," and a release of the Universal News, wherein is featured the recent cancellation of air-mail contracts and the calm before the late Austrian storm.

Sound vibrations from steamship whistles have been found responsible for breaking huge chunks of ice off Taku glacier far up the Pacific Coast. Large pieces of ice on the face of the glacier, which would eventually fall anyway, seem to be loosened rapidly by certain sounds from steamship whistles.

The nation covers an area of 80 square miles and has a population of about 10,000. Concert Here Proves Roth Quartet's Skill

'Cross-Tone Puzzles' Show Power of Musicians From Budapest.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition. By Ray C. B. Brown.

Continuing the series of concerts at the Library of Congress, the Roth String Quartet presented last evening the third program consisting of Laszlo Lajtha's Quartet No. 3 (1930), Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 7 (1925) and the C major quartet of Mozart. In the readings of these works, the visitors from Budapest deepened one's respect for their authoritative pulse, their technical ease and their clarity of exposition.

The Lajtha Quartet is one of those works which W. J. Henderson so aptly and unforgettably characterized as cross-tone puzzles. Bewildering of the ears is inevitably occasioned by such deliberate excess of dissonance, such plenitude of harmonic entanglements. In the midst of these congestions a simply harmonized theme intrudes with a sense of shock, as in the "Vivo" section of the last movement.

Lajtha's imaginative faculty does not equal his constructive skill. The contrapuntal writing is excellent, but there is, at least in a first hearing, little that the mind of the listener can fasten upon as clues to the meaning. The most readily apprehended portions of the work are the andante with its suggestions of nocturnal musings, and the Comodo movement which hints at a scherzo mood.

Humor abounds in Milhaud's Quartet, a humor that is witty rather than broadly rolicking. Deliberation of dissonance rules here also, but with a cleverness of phrase that makes its point every time. Gentle derision plays about a romantic theme, and sophisticated smiles at sentiment.

In the movement directed "Doux et sans hâte," seriousness reigns over a decidedly poetic content. Here is some fine atmospheric writing, charged with imagery.

The Mozart Quartet, the last of the six dedicated to Haydn, is in the composer's favorite key of C major—favorite in the sense that he wrote therein his profoundest and greatest works.

Miss Skinner's Third Program Highly Lauded

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition. "IN A GONDOLA" "MOTORIZED IN THE '90s'" "THE EMPRESS EUGENIE" PART I.

SCENE 1. In the Bois de Boulogne. SCENE 2. In the gardens of Compiègne. SCENE 3. An anteroom of the Tuilleries. SCENE 4. After the defeat at Sedan. SCENE 5. Visit of condolence by Queen Victoria. SCENE 6. The Hotel Continental, Paris, 1919.

Running the gamut of every human experience and depicting each with a surety of touch and delicate shading of expression, Miss Cornelia Otis Skinner continued her conquest of Washington last night by a single performance of "The Empress Eugenie." And when we say "single" we are trying to emphasize the fact that this was Miss Skinner's only presentation, during her Washington engagement, of this epic of dramatic perfection. Those who missed it lost a bit of glamorous beauty well worth their capturing.

From the first instant that she appears upon stage as the lovely young Mme. de Montijo, Comtesse de Teba, the young commoner belle of Louis Napoleon, until the final curtain falls upon an old woman who has known love, power and tragedy, disappointment and defeat, and has become very weary, wise and not at all sorry that life will soon ebb away, she holds her audience in spellbound rapture.

The gorgeous pageantry of Eugenie's existence is woven into a pattern so subtle, so replete with pathos, humor, heartbreak and valor, and yet so filled with that obscure mastery that is life itself, that "The Empress Eugenie" becomes, under Miss Skinner's deft touch, a living drama performed upon a stage peopled with the characters of her imagination. There is Louis Napoleon, the young Prince Imperial, Queen Victoria and all the other dramatic personae of that romantic period of history. In the hollow of her hand she seems to hold these folk; they are her subjects to touch or hear or ignore as fancy prompts her.

Miss Skinner, author, playwright, actress extraordinary and show-woman supreme, again proves that the impossible is but child's play to her facile imagination. In a great rebellion against the renaissance of classicism she makes the staid characters of history live, move and have their being in a warmth of life and clarity of speech that can be understood by all. And this, dear public, is Art!

Giving full sway to her intrepid genius, Miss Skinner, as usual, precedes her solo-drama with four character sketches: "A Southern Girl in the Sixties Chapel," "In a Gondola," "Homework," and "Motoring in the '90s." The last two are purest and most delicious comedy with a wide range of dividing years. "Homework" is a sketch of a modern young mother who refuses to accept defeat and "Motoring in the '90s" is Miss Skinner's interpretation of that delightful period of the "horseless carriage." And the sketch entitled "A Southern Girl in the Sixties Chapel" is a gem which all Southerners will enjoy.

Tonight Miss Skinner again will give Washington a chance to see the latest dramatic sequence which has attracted such widely spread and agreeable notice: "The Loves of Charles II."

Board Weighs Chain Stores' Liquor Appeal

Maryland Verdict Waited; Bad Check Charge Draws Penalty.

Westminster, Md., Feb. 16 (Sp.). An appeal from a decision of the Carroll County board of license commissioners who refused to grant a liquor license to the Read Drug & Chemical Co. for their local store was heard here yesterday before the State license bureau. Decision was reserved.

Frank P. Bratten, chairman, said the hearing is the first of its kind, and hinges on the question of what constitutes a bona fide officer of a corporation under the State liquor law. The decision may affect all chain stores selling liquor in Maryland.

Counsel for petitioners who oppose the license claimed that the law requires that a company seeking a license must have an officer who is a registered voter and taxpayer in the county and who resided in the county two years prior to the application. They asserted the appointment of Edward O. Diffendal, of Westminster, as a vice president of the company just prior to filing of the application did not comply with the law.

Diffendal, it was charged, was not a bona fide officer of the Read Drug & Chemical Co. because he had no control over the policies of the company and was merely elected in order that the local store could obtain a license. Attorneys representing the chain store stated Diffendal could exercise control by reporting any violation of the law at the local store and could at any time cause revocation of the license through his resignation.

A Frederick jury awarded her $4,000 damages, but the city was granted a new trial.

Justice Smith, in imposing sentence, said that bad-check cases have been increasing daily, and that all persons convicted before him for such offenses would be shown no leniency.

Americans in Need of Learning European Method Of Drinking, Chef of the Club Michel Is Certain

Marsal Thinks Head Waiters Will Prove Good Instructors

Good Wines With Meals Only Proper Way, He Believes; Entertains Ambition of Introducing to Western World Real Spanish Dishes and Gives Recipe for One.

To the average disinterested individual the preparation of foods is a tiresome and often disagreeable task. But to the persons to whom cooking has been a life study the subject becomes more and more packed with allure and unexpected excitement. This is the twelfth of a series of interviews with Washington's best known chefs.

By Susan Mills.

"Americans have forgotten how to drink."

Chef Marsal, of Club Michel, leaned an elbow on the table in the kitchen and explained:

"It is true that some of the old-timers who remember the days before prohibition still know the correct way to drink, but most Americans have forgotten, if they ever knew."

"In my opinion, the only proper way to drink is to have good wines served with meals. The cocktail, of course, is important. The cocktail made of vermouth is the best, I think. It is the best cocktail to stimulate the appetite."

"Then should be served good wines with the dinner. Gin highballs, in which Americans have been indulging so extensively, should be served after a good dinner—after the coffee."

"That is the European way to drink. It is an art—to drink well—and I hope Americans will recapture it."

Best Times to Smoke.

"The head waiter, of the maitre d'hotel, should tactfully teach the public how to drink. It can be done through suggestion, and the public will benefit."

"About smoking between courses? I think it is O. K. If you smoke after a course, the taste of the old dish is killed, and you are ready to enjoy the new. But I believe that the real time for a cigarette or a cigar is between the dessert and the coffee. The diners leave the table, go into the parlor, and smoke as they talk. Or, during the pause before the coffee is brought to the table—then there should be a relaxing smoke."

He laughed as he said, "I am a terrible smoker—terrible. Of course, I can't smoke in the kitchen, so I go out on the fire escape," he pointed through an open door, "and have a puff or two there."

He was thoughtful for a moment. "It is rather different here than on the water. You see, I served my apprenticeship on a steamboat. I started at the bottom—of the profession, not the boat—and after four years became assistant steward."

Executioner Chased.

"It was amusing on the boat. All the stoves had bars on them to keep the dishes from sliding when the boat rolled. The trays the waiter used had grooves in them to keep the dishes in the right place."

"Oh, I remember one thing—it is a good joke. He laughed. "When we were on the water very long we had to take the live stock along with us. One day I was trying to kill a calf. He didn't want to be killed and started chasing me. I jumped all around the place—the calf after me. It was very funny! Finally I caught it by the horns, and hit it between the eyes with a hammer."

"Was I afraid? No. I came from Spain—we are not afraid of the bulls, even when we meet them in the kitchen."

"You want another joke? Oh, yes. Once we sailed to Algeria. The little Arab boys used to come around, and we'd give them the scraps from the kitchen. We had made some potato, or something—it had pork in it. One of the little boys found a piece of pork—immediately they all threw up—immediately they all started yelling 'Allah! Allah!' and praising him. They never came back again for food."

Decorative Dishes.

"I came to this country in 1923. I worked in Philadelphia as the cold meat cook. It is my favorite branch of the kitchen. One can do so many things with cold meat. You see, I like to draw—I had a lot of it at the University of Spain where I graduated. Cold meats can be so attractively decorated."

"For instance—we would take a cooked ham—and it is drawn the outline of the two continents—like this." He traced a pencil across a piece of paper. "Here is Europe, and here, North America. Then we would fill in the different States and countries with egg white or yolk-cooked carrots, beets and other things. It was a pretty dish."

"I like cooking. I went into the profession by accident—I started out to be a bookkeeper. I was in military school once. My father was an officer, and I always wanted to be in the Army, but was disqualified because of my size—I am too small." He smiled a little.

Spanish Food Education.

"One thing I want to do—it is to introduce to Americans real Spanish cooking. I know it well, and it is the truth that Americans know it not at all. They think they do, but most of the dishes they think are Spanish are really Mexican. I am going to serve real Spanish dishes here at the club, and I guarantee the people will like them."

"I will give you a really Spanish recipe. You try it and see if it isn't good! It is Paella a la Valenciana, which is simply chicken with rice, Valencia style."

PAELLA A LA VALENCIANA. Fry two-pound chickens, cut in small pieces, in olive oil, until they are medium brown. Add one onion chopped very fine, and one pound cooked and shelled shrimp. Cook from 3 to 5 minutes on slow fire so onions won't burn. Add a tablespoon good paprika, and a 16-ounce can of tomatoes (or the equivalent of fresh tomatoes) then add 2 quarts water or chicken broth if handy. Let it cook until it starts to boil, then add four cups rice, one small can of peas (or fresh ones, preferably) and 12 Little Neck clams. Add a pinch of Spanish saffron, and cook in oven for 20 minutes.

Largest Art School In World Aids Idle

3,500 Enrolled in New York, Some Former Bankers.

New York, Feb. 16 (AP).—The biggest art school in the world—a school for and by the unemployed—is ready for its winter term with an enrollment of some 3,500 men and women from 18 to 70 years old.

Bankers without jobs, dowagers without money, plumbers with no work, and college graduates who find the business world unresponsive stood in line today to register in a public school building within the shadow of midtown skyscrapers. Teaching the classes are more unemployed, well-known artists who used to get $2,000 for a portrait or a landscape, fashionable illustrators who in the boom days earned $1,000 a week.

The former vice president of a bank, who collected art and antiques as an avocation and who lost his fortune in the crash, is supervisor of the school, and says he enjoys it more than banking. A doctor of arts from the Sorbonne in Paris, who used to be a highly paid architectural designer, is chief counselor.

Small, Medium and Large Sized Bookcases Are Designed to Match Periods of Rooms

Many Types Available to Meet Requirements of Modern Homes.

By Amos Parrish.

New York, Feb. 16.—No doubt you have often noticed in stage settings and in well-planned houses of today—that significant, decorative things bookcases can do to room schemes. We're not for choosing your books for the color of their bindings, but their cases should be chosen to suit your room and your own needs just as much as your other important furniture pieces. Bookcases built into the wall are often the making of a room. Rows of books filling a corner or flanking the fireplace have a cozy, "come in" quality all their own. Such shelves are often the best way to house a collection not large enough to fill an entire library, but too large for an ordinary bookcase piece of furniture.

Large Period Cases. But the large bookcase, the kind which stood so imposingly in the eighteenth century room, has had the attention of the world's greatest furniture designers. Today it still is used to take care of the family's cherished volumes.

The large colonial or early American bookcase, with broken pediment top and drawers or shelf space in the lower part, still stands in early American period rooms of today.

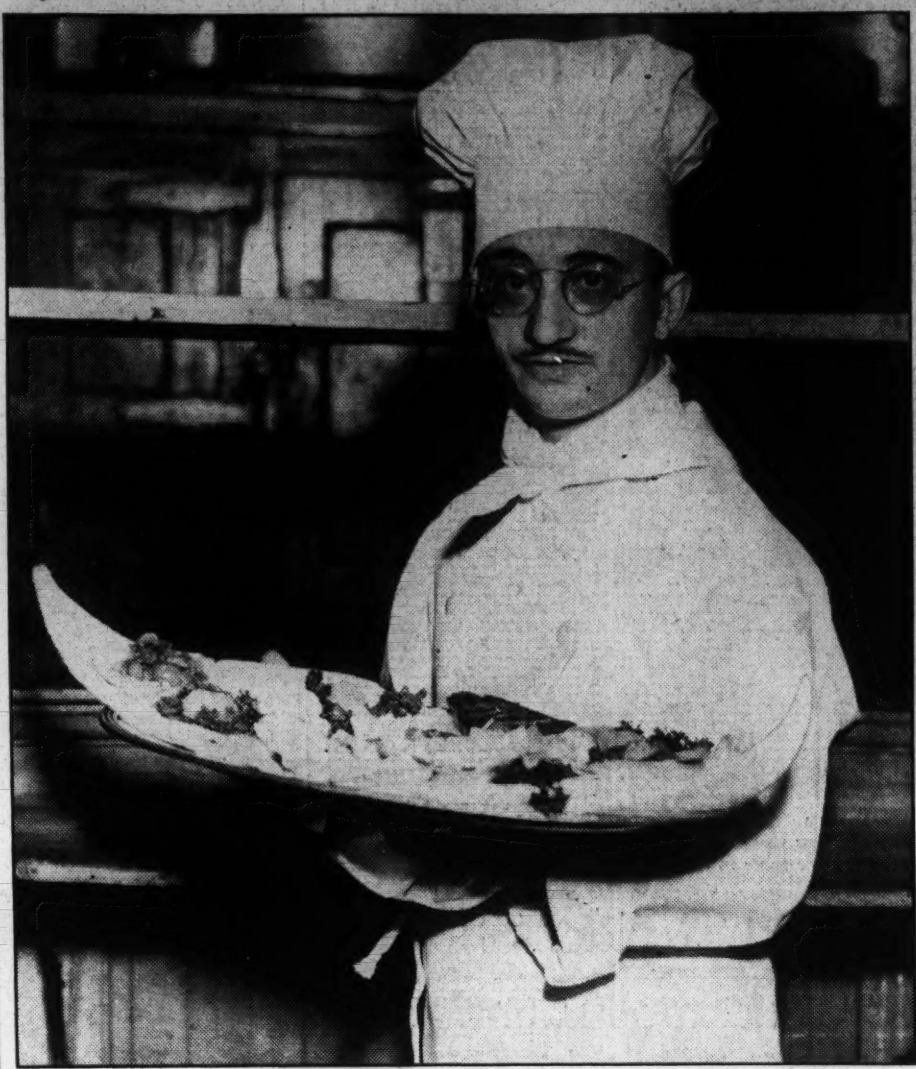

Of course, there are fine early English, French and Italian type bookcases to go in rooms of those periods also. And new modern ones to harmonize with our modern furniture.

The large bookcase sketched, with broken front and stepped-back side sections, is correct for English or French period settings. Its size and stately lines make it suitable for very formal rooms.

Secretary Handy. Combining a bookcase top and a desk below was one of the happiest thoughts a designer ever had... as thousands of dwellers in small apartments will heartily agree. The one you think of first is the Gov. Winthrop secretary. Though the fashion for eighteenth century rooms is bringing back the more unusual eighteenth century secretary with Chippendale details. If you have a room which needs a small bookcase, you'll have no trouble finding one just the right size. Some are built into occasional tables... some form end tables. And even the small cases often have period details, though many are perfectly plain. The bright painted wood case can be quite as suitable for certain informal rooms as the fine mahogany or walnut case is for more formal schemes.

Table Case Fits In.

The small sketch shows a very modern table case, stealing the shape of the old-fashioned revolving bookstand. It has room for a surprising number of the books you want within easy reach... the last detective thrillers, books of Chef Marsal of Club Michel inspects a tray of appetizers before they go to the dining room. He makes the statement that Americans have forgotten how to drink—or at least drink well. His chief interest in foods lies in the comparison of various National dishes, and he gives a recipe that breathes the quality of real Spanish culinary creations.

Here's the Low-Down on High-Up Cats

Snowy Persian Tempest Objects to Chalked Nose, as Who Wouldn't.

By Elizabeth Perrow.

Tempest was raging at the cat show in the Arcadia yesterday. And a white-haired lady in a flowered smock was trying vainly to bring about peace and apply chalk to the nose of the storm.

For the Tempest—most appropriately named—was a white Persian cat. And with yowling and scratching and cat profanity he was expressing his opinion of cat shows in general and women who tried to beautify him by putting chalk on his nose in particular.

"He has been the clown of every show he has ever attended," panted the besmoked lady. "Just look at his nose! Did you ever see anything so black? Be still, Tempest!" Tempest gave her a smile of deceitful sweetness and continued storming.

"Do I think Persian cats are brighter than alley cats?" the woman replied between struggles. "No, I run a cattery and I have known hundreds of cats of all kinds in my life, and I don't see much difference." The storm claimed her attention once more.

And an interested inquirer found that there are as many differences of opinion on the subject of relative intelligence of thoroughbreds and mixed cats as there are cats.

Alley cats are brighter. Persian cats are brighter. They are just the same. Alley cats learn as quickly but not as great a variety of things. A hybrid cat is less nervous and pleasanter to live with. A thoroughbred is more fastidious. Who can possibly tell what a cat is thinking? Nobody knows. Many such answers. The question would make a subject for international debate.

One Tabby Hides Behind Curtain So She Won't Have to Look at Men.

But undoubtedly cats have their idiosyncrasies and these have to be catered to. "Why the boudoir curtain?" questioned one man admirer as he strained his neck to peep behind a cretonne curtain hiding a fair feline.

"That is to keep her from seeing men," replied her owner. "She doesn't like men. She stays in the cellar all night and only comes out after my husband has gone to work. She gets very bad tempered when men come around her. Would you mind moving on? I don't want her to be upset before the time comes to judge her."

In front of each cat sat a watchful owner. Combs, brushes, and medicine bottles in their hands, sweet smiles on their faces and wheedling tones in their voices, they addressed their respective hopes of prize winning. They also expounded their views about cats to all who would listen.

"Yes, indeed," said one fat woman. "Cats are wonderful animals. They are very philosophical. See how this cat is behaving. She hates cat shows but she knows she has to stay. So she endures it stoically."

"Another thing that is admirable about cats is their independence. Now this cat comes of a long line of sheltered and petted cats. Yet if she were turned out in the world tomorrow she could make her way. A thoroughbred dog would starve under those circumstances."

Another cat owner praised the paternal instinct of the male cat. She solemnly declared that while the mother cat often forgets about her kittens after they are weaned, the father does not.

"Why, one of this cat's kittens went to a cat show and when he came back his mother wouldn't speak to him," she said. "But his father washed him all over and consoled him." And she turned an adoring gaze upon the devoted parent.

Perkins Child Labor Statement Criticized

Educator Says She Proves Sentimentalist in Politics.

St. Louis, Feb. 16 (AP).—Dr. Henry S. Pritchett, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, today called a reputed statement by Secretary of Labor Perkins favoring the child labor amendment "an extraordinary proceeding for an administrative officer."

The statement of Dr. Pritchett, released here by the National Committee for Protection of Child, Family, School and Church, also charged that Miss Perkins' stand did much to support the charge that women in politics "would be sentimental rather than thoughtful."

Dr. Pritchett declared that "if the occupational control of all persons under 18 is turned over to a Government agency in Washington, established by Congress, our whole conception of Constitutional government is abandoned."

'Bride Factory' Idea Captivates German Girls

Gladly Eschew Smoking and Cosmetics to Learn Art of Being Wives.

German girls are exchanging their lipsticks and cigarettes for plain uniforms and the wholesome life in general.

They are flocking in great numbers to the working camps established by Hitler—camps that might well be called "bride factories" since their object is mass production of girls who will be so perfectly fitted for matrimony that the German young men will be unable to resist leading them to the altar.

The more marriages, the more children, and the more children, the stronger Germany, reasons Hitler. The Nazi leader was also prompted by another motive when he established the camps. He was making provision for unemployed young women.

Five Months' Course.

Before a girl is considered suitable for wifehood she must attend a "bride factory" five months where she learns how to care for children, how to cook, wash, mend, and sew. She is also given courses in nursing, painting, music, German literature, and folk dancing. If she lives in an agricultural district she learns gardening and dairying.

Many young women, especially unemployed ones, remain in the camp for a second five months. Then they must leave, but they are given a certificate which is supposed to attract prospective husbands. When the certificate fails in that, it helps a girl greatly in getting a job. And no young woman can hope to enter a university unless she has her camp certificate.

Cosmetics Prohibited.

While they are in the "bride factories" the young women are not permitted to smoke or use cosmetics. They wear uniforms consisting of brown blouse, brown leather jacket and black skirt.

Their living quarters are comfortable and fairly attractive. Most of the camps are housed in old farmhouses, abandoned factories and workmen's settlements. Always there is enough space surrounding the building for active sports. The work on the grounds and exterior of the building has been done by members of the boys' camps.

The girls have decorated the interiors. Each camp is a busy, happy place, filled with young women between the ages of 17 and 25, who are learning how to become "perfect wives."

Idle Find Rent Problem Most Serious of All

Social Worker Holds State Will Have to Establish Means of Paying.

Rent is the most serious problem of the unemployed.

Social agencies provide them with food and clothing but there is no place where they can get money to pay the rent.

These observations were made yesterday by Miss Rachael Childrey, District superintendent of family social service, Philadelphia. Miss Childrey came to Washington to attend the two-day conference at the Mayflower of the American Association of Social Workers.

"Unless conditions improve greatly, I believe that eventually the State will have to make some provision for rent money," she said. "It doesn't help them much to give the unemployed things to eat and clothes to wear if they are going to be evicted every month or so because they can't pay their rent. The terrible fear of being put out on the street is just as bad as the fear of starving. I've seen mothers, who were nervous wrecks because they knew that at any moment they and their children might be without shelter."

Landlords' Dilemma.

The landlords, on the whole have been reasonable in the crisis, believes Miss Childrey.

"I've often wondered why they don't band together and demand that the State help them by paying their operating expenses," she said. "Of course, the State has helped to some extent by not collecting taxes. But many of the landlords are losing their properties because they are receiving little or no income from them. It doesn't help them much to evict their tenants. When they do, the buildings stay empty or other nonpaying tenants move in."

Being put out of their homes had caused many unemployed men and women to lose their self-respect, Miss Childrey said. She cited the case of a young clerical worker who kept up his spirit after he lost his job until he was put out of his lodgings. After sleeping in "flop houses," in doorways and on park benches for several weeks he lost all interest in his personal appearance.

Embittered Youth.

"I don't blame him much," said Miss Childrey. "It's hard to look fresh and clean after being cramped on a park bench all night."

In many instances where a family is evicted, it moves in with another family only a little more fortunately situated, Miss Childrey has found. She discovered ten persons, two of whom had tuberculosis, living in three rooms. The father of these unfortunate men and women in anyone who holds out promise of relief is a constant source of wonder to the social worker.

"Most of them think Roosevelt is a sort of god," she said. "Oh, of course I come in contact with some who have become Communists and Socialists, but they are greatly in the minority. The thing that worries me is the young persons of high school age, who see other pupils hanging parties and nice clothes while they themselves have scarcely enough to eat. I wonder what kind of men and women these embittered boys and girls will become."

Jack of All Trades Comes Into His Own

Club Women Told Children Should Train in Many

Chicago, Feb. 16 (AP).—The child of tomorrow should be trained to be a jack of all trades, Miss Helen Bennett, head of the social science division of the 1934 World's Fair, told club women assembled here from five States.

"Children," she said, "going into the industrial field should be trained in more than one job, so that if the march of events displaces them in one they will have something to turn to."

"Likewise, children going into the professions should have more than one string to their boat." Dr. Frank Bane, director of the American Public Welfare Association, said that "without a doubt welfare has become one of the major governmental problems of great concern to the American people."

Conn. Avenue Wine and Beer Cellar to Open

Novel Eating and Drinking
Place Will Feature
Singing Waiters.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

Explorers and exploiters of local smart spots will have new and happy hunting grounds beginning February 21. It all came about this way: Two youngish and personable men around town put their heads together and decided that what Washington needed was a beer-plus-wine cellar, with all the essential accoutrements.

So, beginning next week, there's to be one. If we're walking down Connecticut avenue that evening and see a mysterious doorway emblazoned with a coat of arms we must enter. And then with the gleam of thirst and hunger in our eyes we must venture down a low swinging corridor bordered on either side with bas relief figures warning us what thirst can lead to. Finally, we'll come into a large open court, much resembling a cellar replete with Faustian atmosphere (minus bats and spiders). Brand new table covered with spic and span checked table cloths are placed cozily close to long wall benches. A furnished bronze medieval chandelier throws a low indirect light around the shadowy room. From a balcony over the bar we can look down at the spacious dance floor and the crew of singing waiters rendering harmonic versions of anything we request, from Sweet Adeline to Oh Suzanna.

Double doors down one side of the wall open out to what will prove a delightful beer garden this summer. Those who thirst for Rhine wines, beers, or what not, can here appreciate their yen in the midst of much atmosphere. And they can have menus which suggest all manner of interesting foods, including Weiner Schnitzel, Hasenpfeffer, Schnitzel a la Holstein, Sauerbraten, Apfel Strudel, Kase Strudel and so on through many other alphabetical gymnastics.

Owners of slender purses will expand with pleasure when they learn there is no cover charge. Neither luncheon nor dinner has any surplus pence attached. In the evenings there will be an amusing and inexpensive place to pass the time with the easy confidence that the bill won't wreck our finances.

New Pastry Sells Fast.

There's a cook in town who is a pie crust connoisseur, an artist of tarts and an adept hand at all kinds of cakes. His small domain is a pastry shop where he holds forth with much beating of batter and expert baking.

A short time ago a trio, the cook, the owner and the manager, originated some new tarts, lemon meringue, pumpkin and strawberry. They placed them in the show window and waited the results. Customers were tempted by their delectable appearance and bought a few to sample. And then they returned for dozens.

Every day this cook turns out fresh products just many of each. If they sell out during the day, disappointed customers must bide their time and arrive a bit earlier the next day. In many instances it's wise to call and put in an advance order.

Besides the unusual tarts, there are delicious creamcakes, a unique combination of devil food and chocolate cream filling, which sell for 25 cents. Today there are whipped cream macaroons, perfect examples of light, crisp, macaroons with layers of real whipped cream.

How to Dial a Drink.

The cocktail question and wine problem are easily solved by means of the wine and cocktail dials on sale now in a Connecticut avenue store.

It's remarkable that a silver disk slightly larger than a silver dollar could contain so much important information. Just one turn of it discloses what wine is appropriate with each course, Rhine or Moselle, with fish, sautee, with oysters and so on down the list. And then, on the other side, are recipes for innumerable cocktails, Bronx, Clover Club, Dubonnet and many more.

So comparatively few people in this day know exactly the whys and wherefores of liquor serving that a guide of this kind is the surest and easiest means to avoid haphazard and disastrous guesses.

Bitter Sweet Chocolate.

We had often wondered why someone didn't make an effort to combine the finish of manufactured candy with that certain something characteristic of the creamy tidbits straight from the domestic kitchen. Now all at once we find that someone has done that very thing. A candy specialist here in town has the candy art down pat. She makes bitter sweet chocolate drops that taste like the essence of perfect candy, and the boxes she prepares are artistic.

Her products are on sale in a Dupont circle shop, or may be bought directly from her kitchen.

Common Ingredients May Be Manipulated To Make Uncommon and Tasty Sandwiches

Ann Barrett Tells How Unusual Combinations
May Be Utilized.

By Ann Barrett.

Right out of the daily common stock of foods comes the preferred stock of sandwiches for parties. The smart flavored butter sandwiches that Ruth Comfort Mitchell, author, prefers; the cream cheese variations that Aviatrice Ruth Nichols likes best; and all the ham, sardines, egg, peppy cheese and pickle combinations that men make for first.

Beyond having a stock of such ingredients on hand (with good bread, compact enough to cut thin without crumbling) all you need is the spirit of adventure to combine and manipulate these ingredients into sandwiches perfect in form, color and flavor.

Successful Experiments.

Take bacon, for example. You've probably taken it often in combination with eggs, cheese and tomato. But how about it with something sweet? (Salty and sweet is grand, you recall, in the familiar waffle or pancake-bacon-and-syrup combination.) Dates are fine! Mash them up to a paste, you can buy dates, paste (ready-made). If the dates are hard you may have to cook them first in a tiny bit of water. Spread one side of a buttered slice of bread with mixture. On the other buttered side put a thick sprinkle of bacon (first fried, then chopped). Unite the sandwich—the effect is perfect! Particularly if you've made it on white bread (which shows off a dark filling better than dark bread does).

Sweet chutney pickle with chopped bacon is another good salty-sweet combination. So is good dried beef on thin slices of Boston brown bread with raisins in it. Another combination that folks eat and eat (whenever they get the chance) is soft strong cheese (various kinds come in packages) mashed up smooth with a bit of grated onion, a few teaspoons of some spicy bottled sauce such as Worcester'shire and a touch of Italian tomato paste or catsup. Suit your taste on the proportions to use—you can't go wrong.

Send for Sandwich Recipes.

I'd like to explain how such sandwiches are shaped into checkerboards, pinwheels, rolled sandwiches and other smart shapes. But this is best explained by diagram. So I've put these diagrams together with 25 sandwich recipes (including the way to make flavored-butters) in my newly revised bulletin, "Smart Sandwiches for Parties." Please make sure to send 6 cents in loose stamps with self-addressed envelope, and coupon below.

Sail Boat Salad Recipe Wins $5

Mrs. J. P. Hill Rewarded for Delicious and Decorative Dish.

The sailboat salad recipe submitted by Mrs. J. P. Hill, of 1613 Nineteenth street, northwest, has been awarded The Post's weekly $5 prize.

This salad will lend a charming atmosphere to any Washington's Birthday celebration. Besides being delicious and decorative, it is easily and quickly prepared.

In case you are not entertaining on Washington's Birthday why not surprise the family with this salad? The children will be delighted and thrilled, not to mention others' reaction.

The recipe follows:

Sailboat Salad.

Serve a whole banana for each person. Cut a slice off the long way and take out some of the center. Squeeze a little lemon juice on the banana. Then fill the cavity with cream cheese and pecan nuts mixed. Put a small American flag at the front for the sail. Serve on individual plates on a lettuce leaf to represent water. Either mayonnaise or French dressing can be used.

Gallows of Chance

By E. Phillips Oppenheim.

The Story Thus Far.

Sir Humphrey Rossiter, England's young home secretary, returning to London in a rented automobile after visiting Lord Edward Keynesham in Norfolk County, is seized by a band of masked men who take him to a building resembling a prison. They place him upon a gallows and demand he grant a reprieve to Cecil Brandt, doomed to be hanged for murder the next morning. Refusing to agree, a hangman approaches the gallows. A messenger arrives with word that Mrs. Brandt is at Rossiter's London home with fresh evidence. He is released, hears Mrs. Brandt's story and agrees to grant a reprieve.

She leaves; he picks up his telephone to call Wandsworth Prison—and collapses in a faint. When he regains consciousness he learns that Brandt has been hanged. Mrs. Brandt disappears on her way to have dinner with Rossiter. Scotland Yard operatives find him missing when they answer a summons to his home. Young Detective Pank goes to Norfolk and learns that Lord Edward Keynesham engineered the abduction of Rossiter the night before Brandt's execution.

Rossiter returns home but refuses to tell Scotland Yard where he had been. He learns that he has been named coexecutor with Mrs. Brandt of Brandt's large estate. A young American visits him and demands a mysterious key. His caller chokes him. From behind a curtain appears Pank and covers Van Pleyden, the assailant, with a pistol. The assailant escapes by leaping through the window. Rossiter's butler tells him the mysterious key had been left in the house the morning of Brandt's execution. Keynesham returns from a trip to France and Rossiter encounters him in a club.

Keynsam winces. "That had something to do with it, of course," he admitted. "I was only one of half a dozen. We were all in the same boat. We didn't want Brandt hung until one of us had seen him."

"And, therefore, you put me to the torture?" "It couldn't be helped," Keynesham interrupted doggedly. "Brandt had done a hellish thing. No ordinary brain could have conceived anything so utterly malicious. You only half believed us, Humphrey—Louise and me—when we carried you and Katherine Brandt out of that picture for a time, but when you got back you must have understood better. You can guess what would have happened to you if you had been around when they searched your house. Van Pleyden probably gave you an idea."

"So he is one of your gang, is he?" "He is one," Keynesham confessed. "He's not the worst, though, as I'm afraid you will find out unless you will listen to me. Humphrey, you have got to listen to me. I want to save your life, and there is only one way."

"What I want," Lord Edward said firmly, "is for you to refuse the executorship."

"Why should I?" Sir Humphrey asked. "Katherine Brandt is an old friend. I feel that I ought to help her in any way I can."

"Will you give up the executorship?" Keynesham persisted. "Certainly not," Sir Humphrey replied. "I am sorry, Edward, but you are asking me a foolish thing, and you are not attempting to explain it. Some one has to be the man's executor, and that some one should be a friend of Katherine Brandt's."

Shoulders Shrugged.

Keynsam shrugged his shoulders and turned back to his lunch. "Then God help us all," he said. "That afternoon the home secretary drove to Angel's Court, Chelsea, where Katherine Brandt was once more safely established in the delightful little maisonette where she had lived before her marriage."

"My dear Katherine," he explained, "these meteoric disappearances for which you are, I fancy, a little more responsible than I am, interfere somewhat with my regular activities. I wonder how long we are going to be left alone now."

"But are we being left alone?" she demanded. "What's this about a burglary? It's in all the papers."

"She handed him a news sheet, and he glanced through the headlines. Burglary at the Home Secretary's House in Chestow Square—Shots Exchanged Between Unknown Burglar and Detective—Nothing of Value Stolen."

"Mysterious Enemies."

"Was it those mysterious enemies of yours again, do you think?" she asked anxiously.

"For the moment," he confided, "we can only indulge in speculation. One of the most engaging young men I ever met in my life called to see me yesterday afternoon and, after making courteous conversation for a few moments, suddenly demanded, on behalf of himself and an unknown array of friends, that I yield up a key."

"Humphrey!" she cried. "My dear Humphrey!"

"At any rate we know now what they're after," he remarked. "A key?"

"Precisely. I failed altogether to convince that obstinate young man that I possessed no key which was not my own property. He called my attention to the fact that during my absence from home my belongings had already been ransacked in search of this article, as yours had been, and in kindly but forcible fashion gave me to understand that unless I parted with it I was likely to come to a violent and untimely end."

"But didn't you tell him that you know nothing about any key?" "I did. He disbelieved me entirely. He showed signs, in fact, of laying violent hands upon me, when suddenly the detective whom I had forbidden Scotland Yard to place anywhere near the premises made a melodramatic appearance and stopped the whole business."

"Did he arrest the young man?" Katherine asked eagerly.

"No such luck," Sir Humphrey groaned. "He went off through the window with a great crashing of glass, and so far as I know they're not caught him yet. * * * Now comes the humorous part of the whole thing."

"Well, I appeal to you—isn't it humorous?" he demanded. "The world's finest burglars have opened up safe and bureau with the utmost ease. They have ransacked my belongings in every quarter of the house. They have done the same to your trunks and your belongings, and all the time—where was the key?"

"You don't mean to say that you know?" she cried.

"The key," he confided, "was, during the whole of the time, in a soiled square envelope which I rather fancy had 'Wandsworth Prison' at the back of it, slipped behind a dish on a shelf in my butler's pantry!"

She let go his shoulder, which her fingers had been gripping, and stood away from him. The light faded from her face. There was fear in her eyes.

Radio Waves and Ripples

A LONGSIDE a crib in Gallinger Hospital, WJSV engineers will set up tomorrow afternoon a mass of equipment that may look terrifying to the crib's occupant, a 4-month-old boy who just has lost his mother.

But there would be no terror if the boy could understand that all those wires and ominous-looking black cases were there to bring his mother back. She left him with Lottie Stephens, a matron, in the Metropolitan Theater Thursday.

Appealing for her return will be Capt. Rhoda Milliken, of the Woman's Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Department, whose responsibility is finding missing mothers; Dr. Edgar A. Bockoc of Gallinger, who is charged with caring for motherless babies, and Patricia Morse, of the Board of Public Welfare, who finds homes for them.

They will be interviewed by Robert Trout, beginning at 8:45 p. m.

A NOTHER radio sponsor has become conscious of growing public aversion to long-winded advertising announcements. This time it is the firm paying Will Rogers and George M. Cohan. It has jammed all advertising for a half hour show into 132 words, no more, no less. Exact reading time is 55 seconds.

Immediately following his March 4 broadcast, Rogers will hear of Europe, particularly Russia, to gather new material for the papers and radio. He will be succeeded by Cohan.

"Faust," 1:45 p. m.; The Cavaliers' quartet, "La Paloma," "Little Boy Blue," "Sweet Sue" and "Annie Laurie," 8:20 p. m.; Rudolph Schramm, pianist 10:15 p. m.

WJSV—First performance of Deems Taylors revision of "Circus Day," New York Philharmonic's children's concert, 11 a. m.; a broadcast from the world's largest transmitter at Rugby, England, 4:45 p. m.; George Raft and Ralph Rainger with Raymond Paige's orchestra, 10 p. m.

"Faust," the first opera to go on the air from an opera house, is given its initial complete airing in National's broadcast from the Metropolitan today.

N. B. C. broadcast a portion of the Gounod opera from the old Auditorium Theater in Chicago eight years ago as the air's first network operatic performance.

Eide Norena, Giovanni Martinelli, Lawrence Tibbett and Gladys Swarthout will be in the cast. Between acts, John B. Kennedy will interview Richard Bonelli, Metropolitan barytone.

A revised and rescored suite of tone poems by Deems Taylor, entitled, "Circus Day," will be played for the first time today in the New York Philharmonic-Symphony's children's concert on C. B. S. at 11 a. m. The original composition, orchestrated by Ferde Grofe, was written for and performed by Paul Whiteman in 1925.

Taylor has rewritten the work for traditional symphony presentation. The suite attempts to convey early impressions of a day at the sort of circus that preceded the three-ring affair of today—the small traveling company of the one-night stand period.

Columbia's "Big Show" is growing to the point where it's about time for the publicity writers to call it "colossal."

Lynne Overman, of musical comedy; Helen Ford, of Broadway and London boards; and Fray and Braggiotti, pianists, have been called in to do their pieces for the Monday night performance.

Overman and Ford have hit upon an original idea in a sketch entitled, "The Dinner Date." Fray and Braggiotti offer an arrangement of "Dary Eyes" and "Temptation."

Fred Waring has brought Frank Buck back alive.

The original bring-em-back-alive man ran out on the Pennsylvanians several nights ago when he was to make a guest appearance on their new commercial. He will be around for broadcasting of his adventures in India and the Malay peninsula next Thursday.

Admiral Byrd and his good ship, the Bear of Oakland, are sloshing around in the bay ice surrounding the Antarctic continent, so it isn't likely that the admiral will be on hand to broadcast tonight.

Neither will he be able to hear Columbia's contribution to Little America's week-end—Bainbridge Colby, former Secretary of State, addressing the American Philatelic Society in a stuffy dining room of New York's Hotel Astor.

Philatelic interest in Byrd expedition stamps is the C. B. S. excuse for linking the society dinner with the Little America program.

King Favors Early Start On Slum Job

Pension Office Change,
Patent Office Work,
Are Approved.

CWA Aid for Projects
Urged; D. C. Gasoline
Tax Advocated.

Remodeling and enlargement of the old Pension Office and the Government warehouse and removal of all steps on the south side of the old Patent Office were approved yesterday by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Of the three projects, funds have been allotted only for the warehouse extension at Ninth and D streets southwest. Approval of the construction of two wings on the Pension Office Building in Judiciary Square is contingent upon the additional being set back sufficiently to save the many large elm trees on the grounds.

The approved plan to remove the Patent Office steps in order to widen F street, between Seventh and Ninth streets, by 36 feet was reproduced in The Post last Tuesday. It will make possible conversion of the present "bottleneck" into a two-way street for motor traffic.

Early Start Urged.
Chairman William H. King, of the Senate District Committee, a member of the commission, strongly recommended an early start on the Municipal Center development and allocation of civil works funds to demolish the Capital's insanitary and dilapidated buildings.

The commission took no formal action on the Municipal Center, which Senator King would make a PWA project, but approved the raising of useless structures as a step in slum clearance after listening to the report of John Nolen, jr., director of planning.

Favor Gasoline Tax.
Park roads as well as District streets should benefit by improvements made possible by gasoline taxes, the commission held, voting to forward such a recommendation to the Commissioners and Congress.

Plans for the Arlington County sewerage system, financed by a public works loan and grant, were described by A. B. McDaniel, chief sanitary engineer of Arlington. They were approved, with slight modification.

Reports were presented by T. C. Jeffers and C. Marshall Finnan on development of Rock Creek Park; Nolen and Finnan on the improvement of Piney Branch Parkway under CWA auspices, and T. S. Settle on pending legislation.

The meeting will be concluded today.

Virginia Senate Defeats Beer Tax Reduction

Boxing Bill Is Passed by House; Rum Sale in Hotels Sought.

By Doug Warrenfels.
Richmond, Feb. 16.—Proposals for beer tax reductions were rejected today by the Senate, while the House passed a bill to permit professional prize fights.

The Senate turned down, by 21 to 16, a liquor bill amendment which would have cut the high-test beer tax from $2.75 to $1 a barrel. A companion amendment for reduction of the bottled beer tax from a cent to a half cent was killed without a record vote.

Senator Aubrey G. Weaver, Front Royal, declared a lower tax would bring back the lost beer. He argued cheap beer would encourage temperance by reducing hard liquor consumption.

Replying to comment by Senator Saxon W. Holt, Newport News, that he recently paid 20 cents for a bottle of beer, Mr. Weaver said: "Senator Holt must be a gay old boy because if he paid 20 cents a bottle for beer he surely was in a private dining room."

Says State Would Lose.
Senator John W. Rust, Fairfax, said experience in other States showed a cut in the tax would lead to bring cheaper beer. He added the State would lose $300,000 a year in revenue if the Legislature trimmed the tax.

"The froth-blowers," remarked Senator S. L. Ferguson, Appomattox, "are the only people behind the amendment."

Senator J. Belmont Woodson, Lowesville, obtained favorable action on an amendment to permit farmers to have their waste apples converted into brandy and sold to the liquor control board or authorized dealers in other States.

Another finance committee change approved would authorize individuals to transport as much as a gallon of liquor at a time into the State. Further debate would section, however, was expected Monday.

A fight for amendment to the liquor bill to allow whisky sales in hotels and restaurants as well as in State-operated dispensaries was abandoned. Instead, Mr. Weaver advanced a separate measure for the same purpose.

His proposal would empower the control board to issue liquor licenses to any hotel or restaurant it considered "substantial." State licenses would cost $200 while localities could charge from $150 to $300 for permits.

Senate Gets Boxing Bill.
After House passage by 64 to 24, the boxing bill was sent to the Senate. Delegate Ralph Daughton, Norfolk, explained the measure would authorize appointment of a boxing commission by the Governor. Smoking or drinking at fights would be prohibited. Fifteen-round bouts would be permitted.

The Assembly elected Edward Meeks, Amherst, to succeed the late Bennett Gordon as judge of the Twenty-ninth Judicial Circuit, including Amherst, Nelson and Fluvanna Counties.

Counties and cities would be permitted to borrow on delinquent tax tickets from the State literary fund under a bill offered by Delegate Wilbur C. Hall, Leesburg, and John Q. Rhodes, Louisa. The sponsors explained $700,000 was available for such loans, needed to keep many schools open the remainder of the current term.

Delegate C. G. Quesenberry, Waynesboro, introduced a bill calling for abolition of the General Hospital Board and contemplating transfer of its powers to special boards of directors.

Senate Group To Seek Milk Industry Aid

King to Schedule Session
Next Week to Hear Capital Plans.

Tentative Sub-Committee Report Now Being Examined.

Divergent views on what should be done to better the milk industry in the Washington area are to be fought out in a meeting of the Senate District Committee, which will be called next week by Senator William H. King (Democrat), of Utah, chairman of both the full and the sub-committee which had charge of the investigation.

A report of the sub-committee has been tentatively drafted and is under study by members. Two schools of thought divide the group. Senator King is understood to favor recommending legislative action which will improve the conditions for both producers and consumers.

Organization Suggested.
The tentative draft of the sub-committee report contains a recommendation that the producers take such steps as may be necessary, probably through formation of an organization, to control distribution and prevent unfair prices.

Senator Patrick A. McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, and Senator Warren Austin (Republican), of Vermont, are understood to favor recommending legislative action which will improve the conditions for both producers and consumers.

Waste Is Decried.
The report of Elwood Seal, who conducted the investigation for the sub-committee, contains a proposal for a milk commission which would have something of the characteristics of the public utilities commission. This recommendation met with the general approval of both Senators Austin and McCarran at the time, but whether such a proposal will be embodied in the sub-committee report neither would predict yesterday. They indicated their belief that the recommendations of the report should be more general.

"The deficiencies of our present system are shown by our wasteful distribution system," Senator McCarran said. "Any day one may see from two to four milk trucks delivering in one city block. The producer certainly does not get the benefit of this and the consumer has to bear the burden of the excessive cost. I believe some legislation can be enacted which would help that situation."

Fresh Stand Seen Against Pay, Benefits

Harrison Reveals Memo on Cost of Veterans' Relief.

Summary Is Interpreted as Restatement of Opposition.

A declaration of the Administration's determination to defeat the drive for full restoration of Government salaries and increased benefits for veterans was seen in publication yesterday by Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, of a summary of veterans' legislation.

The summary was prepared by J. O'Connor Roberts, Veterans' Administration solicitor, and was inserted in the Congressional Record following the report of Thursday's debate, when it was agreed to postpone the pay and veterans fight until Monday.

"It can be stated without reservation that there has been established a reasonable and just program of relief, which, under the policy of the President, is being rounded out on the basis of the study of the effects of the provisions," Mr. Roberts said in his report.

No Reference to Salaries.
Although the report made no reference to Government salaries, its declaration on veterans' benefits was regarded significant because both questions are involved in the independent offices bill, and on both the Administration has made clear its opposition to restoration demands. The questions are linked, too, by the fact that Senators who are fighting for one are fighting for the other.

Figures were cited in the Roberts report to show the cost of veterans' benefits, placing the expense in the fiscal year of 1932 at $987,539,330.27. In 1933 the cost was $931,025,164.64; and the 1934 cost was estimated at $945,988,834.

Calculates 1938 Figures.
"It has been estimated upon a conservative basis that without any further liberalization in the laws, the cost of veterans' relief would amount to $1,081,200,000 for the estimated peak year 1938."

"Of course, if past history were to repeat itself and similar provisions made for World War veterans and their dependents as had been made for veterans and the dependents of veterans at prior wars, taking into consideration economic changes which might reasonably be expected, this estimated cost might reach $1,913,400,000 in an estimated peak year of 1950."

"Certainly up to the adoption of the economy act, one had every reason to believe we would continue on our reckless way."

Cunningham, Bonthron and Venzke Primed for Epic Clash at Mile

Carnera Sees
Early K. O.
At MiamiLoughran Will Be One to Get Tired in Walking Away, He Says.Feels Foo's Speed Is Overestimated, Adds
Sharkey Is Better.

M IAMI, Fla., Feb. 16 (U.P.).—The heavyweight champion of the world took a long walk today and talked of many things.

His 2-yard stride carried him for miles along the palm shaded causeway and as he ambled he told how he is going to stop Tommy Loughran in their championship fight here February 28.

"I shall knock him out soon," Primo Carnera prophesied. "I do not know just how soon but it will be not many rounds, maybe as much as ten, maybe three or four. I know I shall knock him out. You will go home early that night."

Wait and See, He Says.

"He will start going backwards right away," Primo said. "I know he figures I shall be made tired by giving him the chase. But you can not walk backwards as easy as you can walk forwards and he will be the one to get tired and then I shall place him asleep. You wait and see."

Carnera looks very fit indeed, he is nicely sun-tanned and appears to be in perfect condition.

What does he concentrate on in training for Loughran?

"Mostly I try for more speed. But at the same time I get myself in perfect condition. Not every one says I knock him out and I must be ready to last fresh for one hour if I do not knock him out. But they are wrong."

Says Speed Overestimated.

Carnera believes that Loughran's supposed speed is greatly overestimated.

"They say I never meet a fast man and a good boxer. I met Sharkey twice and he is just as fast as Loughran. Maybe he is faster. I think so. Sharkey is better boxer and harder puncher and yet I knock out Sharkey. Sharkey was stronger and bigger than Loughran and yet I knock him out."

Carnera subscribes to the old-fashioned boxing school which believes in early morning road work. He runs between 6 and 8 miles each morning and the first 4 miles are done, at dog trot, without a stop. At least, this is the story of Billy DeLoe, Carnera's diminutive trainer. His afternoons are taken up with sparring some 10 or 12 rounds.

Divisions Are Cards.

Carnera's "camp" is a large stucco house in the northwest section of Miami proper. The manager consists of some of his sparring partners, his American representative, Billy Duffy; his trainer, DeLoe; his chef and his Japanese chauffeur-valet-handman. His diversions are cards—rummy and solitaire. He does not play bridge. He sees a tangle now and then, but does not dance while training. He likes to dance. He was glad the fight was postponed. Felt he needed the work.

He was pestered because his manager, Louis Soreli, in New York, attributed the postponement to an injury of one of Primo's hands. Neither hand was injured. He believes he will stay in the ring for many years and he will be champion all the time. He thinks Mussolini is wonderful. Hopes Duce sends him a "good luck" cablegram. He does not eat spaghetti while training, but tosses off an occasional cocacout.

Shepherdstown

Charles Town, W. Va., Feb. 16 (Sp.).—Holding the heavily-favored Shepherdstown High School team scoreless throughout the first half, Charles Town High's basketball squad defeated the Shepherds for the first time in five seasons by a score of 19-14.

The visitors were unable to solve Charles Town's newly adopted man-to-man defense, and failed to register a point until the third quarter. Score at half time was 8-0. Jack Trussell, star forward, and Sweeney, Shepherdstown forward, shared high point honors with seven points apiece. Sweeney lead the field in floor scoring, three of Trussell's points being made via the free throw route.

Charles Town's girls team made it a double victory in the preliminary game by defeating the visiting sextet 25-17. Dorothy Bailey led the evening's scorers with 10 points.

Besse Event, Off Poorly, Races to Fourth Straight Victory at Hialeah Park

$4.50 Choice Wins Over Curacao

Monel Sets Fast Pace, Tires and Finishes in Third Place.

Workman Rides Davoc to $15.40 Triumph; Lady Reigh Scores.

HIALEAH PARK, Feb. 16 (AP).—Blessed Event, Edward Riley Bradley's consistent 4-year-old raced to his fourth straight victory of the winter in the Riviera Purse here today. Handicapped by a poor start and taking the overland route for the entire mile distance, the gelded son of Happy Argo got up to win by a half length from Mrs. Payne Whitney's Curacao, close second choice to the victor. S. W. Labrot's Monel was beaten another half length for second money. Blessed Event, paying $4.90, made the impressive time of 1:33 2-5 under light weight.

The six-horse field came out of the mile chute in two sections, with Monel, Steelingway and Curacao in the lucky division. Monel, a speedy mare, looked all over a winner along the backstretch. Curacao following her pace four lengths behind, while Blessed Event was moving up gradually to take third position. The two favorites, Monel and Curacao, crossed the finish line on the inside of the bend and Blessed Event pushed his head in front at the furlong pole. Curacao offered stubborn resistance and Monel, though tiring, also held on, but the Bradley standard bearer was too good and won going away.

Lady Reigh Scores. Favorite players had hardly an anxious moment with the running of the opener. Lady Reigh, paying $3.20, outclassed six other maidens, winning easily by four lengths. Justa Play beat Jane Foster a length for the place. Lady Reigh disposed of Larissa in short order and galloped the length of the stretch with Justa Play offering weak opposition.

Wise Prince, a first time starter, led home third, other maidens in the second, the colt surviving a blanket finish to score by a half length. Truebeck, Canterboy, Stellar and Earle Maxwell followed as named, heads apart. Canterboy probably was best, but he met with considerable interference from the winner and second horse in a rough race. Eaby claimed foul in vain and was suspended three days by the starter for misbehavior at the post. Wise Prince rushed up fast and finished steadily to outlast his rivals. He paid $11.40.

Davoc Pays $15.40. Davoc, under the husky Sonny Workman's guidance, drove home by a length in the third event, returning $15.40. Lynwood headed the unfortunate Caboose for the place. The latter was off last in a poor start and lost ground by going wide all the way. Davoc was rated close up and saving ground turning for home, won going away. Tottime settled the race.

Major General ran to top form under Johnny Gilbert to take a nose decision over Pardee in the fourth, a 1-mile claiming affair. Bright Bubble, the choice, was a close third, beaten a length. Energetic Boy tired in the final drive after setting a brisk pace and left the issue to Major General and the late-closing Pardee, with the former sticking his nose in front in the final strides. Bright Bubble forced the pace until right near the end. The winner was a 5-to-1 shot.

Warily Wild Wins. Fairly Wild finally found a field in which to beat in the fifth event at $4.50 for two, the gelding scored handsily by 2 lengths over One Chance, with Militia third. Sammy Renick rode perfectly on the winner, rating him behind Militia and One Chance until ready. After turning into the stretch Fairly Wild asserted his superiority and moved well clear.

Boy Crazy, $8.70, took the last purse by 3 lengths from Southard. Come On was a poor third.

Fair Grounds Results.

with Bill Bennings.

Dear Al:

The Bennings Horse Picking Co., Ltd. (and plenty limited at times), managed to hit on two cylinders today. Despite all of Mike's coaxing we could wiggle home only Lady Reigh and Fairly Wild. Be on the lookout for upsets tomorrow. It will be Saturday, the big-money day hereabouts. And many of the sleepers are saved for this week-end shot at the heavy dough. I thought we had a sure winner today in Pardee. I picked him the other day and he went to the front only to stop in the final 20 yards. Today, he went away with the rear fight and was beaten a nose. He would have won in another stride. But try to cash a win ticket on that sentence.

First race—If Scout Master doesn't win this race you can have my watch, providing I can find the ticket for it. This fellow has found several ways of losing races of late. No excuses tomorrow. Garlie comes off that last brilliant effort but is an in-and-outer at best. Olamay set a lot of pace yesterday and may in the money circle.

Second race—From every angle this race looks like it involves No Saint, Love Sick and Mrs. Fab. I'll take these babies in the order named.

Third race—I'm sticking to Miney Myerson. This one runs an honest race with every start and has been Mr. Consistency himself since arriving in these parts. Sabula and Irene's Bob for the other awards.

Fourth race—Springsteel has established his class this winter. Takes weight off that last startling performance and needs only the steady ride by Burke to clinch the purse. Sweeping Light, despite the arguments regarding his ownership, for the place and Clarify for show.

Fifth race—Time Supply has become a Derby threat of late. Figures to outstep this field. Zulu Lad did a lot of powerful running to win the other day and could surprise in this group. Open Range for the third honors.

Sixth race—Pot Au Broom was barely beaten in a previous test. Goes for all the Bennings dough tomorrow. Standout appears second best. Pass Shot, with featherweight, may outfoot the others.

Seventh race—Traffic Judge, when right, likes any route and this is not too far. His sprint last Saturday showed the veteran to be at the peak. Waterway and Momo to take care of the others.

Virginia Coach, Failure as Fighter, Was "Too Old" 30 Years Ago.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Bill McCormick.

IN 1933, when the University of Virginia Boxing Team made the Naval Academy break-bruising brigade walk the plank for first defeat on home decks in 13 years, many credited the Cavaliers' victory to "lucky breaks." Last week, when the Virginians again took Spike Webb's squadron of Midshipmen mittmen for a walk, the many knew better and began groping about for an explanation—which they found in Coach Johnny LaRowe.

Granting without argument that LaRowe is responsible for Virginia's success in boxing, what is responsible for LaRowe's penchant for turning out winning teams? Let us take a peek over a variegated career which has formulated and crystallized a personality as compelling as any in athletics since Knute Rockne.

The interest of that stocky, gray-haired little figure which bounces about with each blow when his boys are fighting, first began to drift toward boxing some time between 1880 and 1891, when he was serving in the Marine Corps.

Not Much Fighter.

"I couldn't fight a lick then," chuckles the grizzled old veteran, puffing contentedly on the inevitable black cigar, "and I can't now. There was one fellow in our outfit who was a great boxing theorist, but he couldn't beat an egg either. The two of us got together and developed a pretty fair knowledge of the science of fighting, but we never did become even fair fighters."

The LaRowe athletic career was apparently terminated in 1891, when he was discharged from the Marine Corps because of "hopeless" heart disease. That fall he managed to wiggle back into the service as a bugler and drummer at the Virginia Military Institute. He taught boxing as a sideline and for 13 years he tooted his bugle, beat his drum and taught the Cadets at the V. M. I. to beat tattoos on the ribs of the opposition.

His athletic career was again apparently terminated more than 30 years ago, when he retired from the V. M. I. because he believed he was too old. Feeling very old and infirm, he went to Charlottesville, Va., where he opened a billiard parlor and settled back to live a life of country-gentlemanly ease.

Poolroom Success.

His billiard emporium gained quick popularity with the students of the University of Virginia, most of whom patronized it to be regaled by Johnny's tall tales of the ring rather than to push the little ivory balls about.

In 1921, fired by LaRowe's thrilling accounts of the glory of fistic fame, some of the boys decided it would be a grand thing for the university to be represented by a boxing team. Not being a recognized sport, there were no school funds available, but old Johnny dug down in his own coffers to help finance the embryonic Dempseys. That season they fought three times, and won once.

In 1922, boxing was recognized as a minor sport and in 1927, after Virginia had annexed its first Southern Conference title, the club-spirited students and even one-legged boys—and they have seldom failed to lose their inferiority complexes after they had been made to realize they could handle themselves. Those boys have received just as careful (and a lot more hopeful) coaching as the prospects who had a chance to make the team.

"We've concentrated on developing boys like that, and if we've gotten a good boxing team out of the mill, that's incidental, although very pleasing."

High-sounding words to one accustomed to the penning, pettifoggery and chiseling of the professional prize ring, but very convincing words as delivered by Johnny LaRowe. That's Johnny's explanation of his success—and one that undoubtedly explains his habit of turning out good teams.

Dear Al:

The Bennings Horse Picking Co., Ltd. (and plenty limited at times), managed to hit on two cylinders today. Despite all of Mike's coaxing we could wiggle home only Lady Reigh and Fairly Wild. Be on the lookout for upsets tomorrow. It will be Saturday, the big-money day hereabouts. And many of the sleepers are saved for this week-end shot at the heavy dough. I thought we had a sure winner today in Pardee. I picked him the other day and he went to the front only to stop in the final 20 yards. Today, he went away with the rear fight and was beaten a nose. He would have won in another stride. But try to cash a win ticket on that sentence.

First race—If Scout Master doesn't win this race you can have my watch, providing I can find the ticket for it. This fellow has found several ways of losing races of late. No excuses tomorrow. Garlie comes off that last brilliant effort but is an in-and-outer at best. Olamay set a lot of pace yesterday and may in the money circle.

Second race—From every angle this race looks like it involves No Saint, Love Sick and Mrs. Fab. I'll take these babies in the order named.

Third race—I'm sticking to Miney Myerson. This one runs an honest race with every start and has been Mr. Consistency himself since arriving in these parts. Sabula and Irene's Bob for the other awards.

Wheat Drives Higher on Rise of Securities

Last-Minute Rallyes Add Strength; Corn Drops; Oats Advance.

Chicago, Feb. 16 (AP).—Last-minute rallyes in the wheat market today, responsive to upturns of securities, gave wheat values a final semblance of strength.

Most of the time earlier, though, sagging of grain prices formed the rule, with traders showing a pronounced disposition to avoid new ventures.

The general drift of gossip was that contrary to recent belief no radical legislative measures affecting stock and commodity exchanges were expected at Washington. For the time being, nevertheless, all speculative demand, except around the opening and close, was reduced today to almost the vanishing point in wheat and other grains.

Wheat closed firm at the same as yesterday's finish to 1/4 cent higher, corn 1/4 down, oats 1/4 up, and provisions varying from 5 cents decline to a rise of 7 cents.

Starting with a slight general advance, influenced by upturns in stocks, cotton, silver and sterling, the wheat market soon switched downward. Apparently nothing temporarily could offset the fact that buying of wheat showed a weak lack of volume.

Price setbacks that followed went well below yesterday's finish, and in some quarters were ascribed partly to forecasts of unsettled weather in Kansas, although map readers could see no prospects of moisture aside from snow flurries.

Acting as a curb on selling pressure, however, was an increasing number of complaints from soft wheat States east of the Mississippi. Friends of higher prices emphasized, too, that the United States wheat visible supply was steadily shrinking at the rate of 2,551,000 bushels a week since January 1.

It was pointed out that a decrease of similar proportions for the remaining 19 weeks until July 1, the end of the crop year, would leave the visible supply the smallest since May 8, 1928, when the price of the May delivery of wheat was $1.50 based on a gold dollar.

Corn and oats sympathized with wheat price setbacks. Shipping call here for corn was relatively slow.

Provisions averaged higher with hog values, but were unsettled by a larger increase in stocks of lard in Chicago than had been expected.

Walt Mason, Himself

The Publisher.

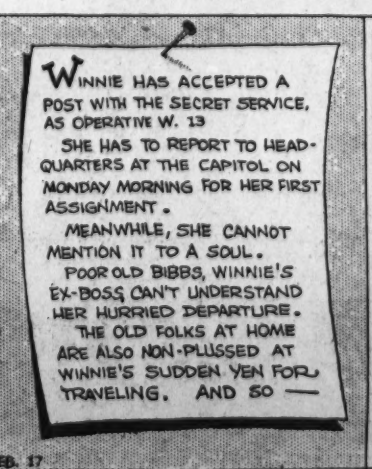

The publisher has ample grief, for which there's seldom much relief. He always hopes to have a look at some great record-breaking book that will achieve best seller rank, and bring the rubles to his bank. And now then a book's in view he thinks will make his dreams come true. He sends it forth in gorgeous tints, and has the critics stand in line to say it is exceeding fine; he thinks he'll ship that volume out in car-load lots, beyond a doubt. But somehow he has missed his guess; the books come creaking from the press, and fall to cut the proper ice—the folks won't buy, at any price. Then as "reminders" they are sold, in heaps as large as trucks can hold, and don't bring in enough to pay for printers' ink thus thrown away. The publisher, he soaks his head; he finds his books are in 'the red, no hopeful light before him beams, he sees the poorhouse in his dreams. And then perhaps some book that's punk, that he considered harmless junk, will dovetail with the public taste, and folks will buy it in their haste, the bookstore seem like one big crush, editions follow with a rush. Such things do happen now and then in this sad world of loved men and publishers to whom their chance can then afford to sing and dance, but nearly always they are prone to hang some wreaths of grape and groan.
